RAINN MAN

Dwight Schrute's interests may not extend much beyond bears, beets and Battlestar Galactica, but actor Rainn Wilson waxes a bit more philosophical in his life off-screen. Since 2009, his media company SoulPancake has been melding pop culture with spirituality, and now the Office star is ready to get even more personal with his memoir The Bassoon King. Complete with a foreword by his fictional alter ego, the tome chronicles his rise to fame and the role his Bahá'í faith has played in the process. Clock in on Nov. 11 when the Emmy nominee stops by the Wilbur Theatre. / Meghan Kavanaugh

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 Tremont Street, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call—a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

I'LL HAVE WHAT SHE'S HAVING

Adversity makes for strange bedfellows, like Mass Eye and Ear and New Kids on the Block, who teamed up to pull off Sense-ation, a blockbuster gala at the Westin Copley Place.

Seen hangin' tough were such boldfaced names as North Shore newlyweds Christina and Peter Townsend, brunette beauty Kimberly Kosanovich and her other half, Milan, blond PR babe Kelley Doyle, Celtics grand poobah Wyc Grousbeck, fashionista Elisha Daniels, Perkins cutie Marilyn Rea Beyer, Boston booster Dot Joyce, and one person who, after inquiring why NKOTB were performing and being told that Joey McIntyre's son has a hearing deficit, asked, "So is that why there are earplugs on the table?"

The evening raised a cool $1.6 million, and the video screen running the entire length of the ballroom prompted one man to ask his wife, "Can I get one of those for the house?"

However, the evening's highlight was undoubtedly a woman who looked to be in her 80s and went full-on teenybopper when the band took to the stage, prompting someone to say, "She's clearly on the right stuff."

REPURPOSE, REUSE, RECYCLE

There's a certain irony in the Silent Spring Institute's name, given that its mission is to make a lot of noise about environmental factors that contribute to breast cancer and other women's health issues.

That said, its annual gala, held at the Royal Sonesta, attracted a well-spoken, well-dressed and well-heeled crowd that included the likes of uber-philanthropist Ted Cutler and his luscious daughter, Ellen Calmas, real estate titan Arthur Winn, BJ's CEO Laura Sen, honorees Enid Shapiro and John Erban, hipster doctor and keynote speaker Siddhartha Mukherjee, Greater Boston Food Bank head Catherine D'Amato, city councilor Josh Zakim with pretty young thing Grace Rosenthal, unapologetic Mets fan Ellen Grubert, Empiriko CEO Pam Randhawa and one woman who said, "It's hard to get my sister-in-law out of the house on school nights," to which a friend responded, "God bless her; I can't wait to get away from my kids."

However, the evening's funniest exchange came when a man complimented a woman on her outfit and she replied, "Thanks. And if you come to this event next year, you'll see it again."

LICENSE AND REGISTRATION

Minus the Village People, pretty much everyone who's anyone was there when the YMCA hosted its Dream Together Party at the Four Seasons.

Present and accounted for: ubiquitous banking panjandrums Rick Musiol and Denise Leyhe, the absurdly handsome Bobby Kleinau with stunner Ali Dallaire, Raytheon bigwig David Wilkins and his wife, Terry, the hale and hearty Mike Daley with his other half, Janet, real estate mack daddy John Fallon, power titan Tom May, marketing and PR guru Tara Murphy, Suffolk County District Attorney Dan Conley, uber-lawyer Bob Popeo, and so on and so forth.

Drinks in the Aujour'dui space were followed by dinner in the ballroom and a performance by the Beano Boyz Crew—the brainchild of New Edition member Michael Bivins—and the evening raised more than half a million bucks.

The only downside: The seizure-inducing blinking blue rings that served as raffle tickets. As one guest put it, "I keep thinking I'm getting pulled over by the police."

PLEASE HOLD

At the opening night of Boston Ballet's ravishing production of Third Symphony of Gustav Mahler by John Neumeier, guests entering the Opera House were informed by ushers that the performance would be an hour and 45 minutes without intermission.

"That long without a pee break?" complained one attendee. "They should be selling Depends at the concession stand."

Once you added in the standing ovation, however, the evening clocked in at around two hours and 15 minutes. And on her way out, the same woman said, "I take it back. The concession stand should be selling Kleenex." ◆

BE OUR GUEST

THERE'S LOTS OF READING material in our Holiday Entertaining issue, but there's plenty of stuff to make, mix and do, too, starting with Meghan Kavanaugh's recipe roundup of top toques' fresh takes on holiday sides, from Brussels sprouts kicked up with black garlic and blistered shishitos to delish-looking pão de queijo that'll allow me to combine my two most beloved food groups (i.e., bread and cheese). Meanwhile, Sarah Hagman turned to some other local pros—a florist, an event planner, a stylist and a blogger—to get DIY tips for turning your abode into a winter wonderland in time for your next holiday party. Elsewhere, we've got easy cocktail ideas from local distillers, a look at a new biz plying sustainable party supplies and, if you'd rather let someone else do the entertaining, deets on some holiday productions hitting Boston stages. Prefer to be entertained from the comfort of your couch? Catch up with our cover subject, BU alum and Bones star Emily Deschanel, who chats with Jonathan Soroff about the appeal of crime procedurals, what makes her squeamish and what she's thankful for. Happy Thanksgiving.

POINTE OF VIEW

A FRESH LOOK FOR JOSÉ MATEO'S HOLIDAY TRADITION

THE DANCE GOES ON: This year's Snow Queen, Madeleine Bonn, has been with José Mateo for 12 years.

Setting the Stage

With this year's Nutcracker, everything old is new again. Before its December run at the Strand Theatre, José Mateo Ballet Theatre returns to the Cutler Majestic, its former home for almost a decade before the theater closed for renovations. And when the curtain rises on Nov. 27, the 15-years-in-the-making homecoming will also be marked by some new additions.

Designer Laura C. McPherson—who's previously worked with the Huntington Theatre, New Repertory Theatre and other local companies, not to mention flicks like The Departed and Gone Baby Gone—is updating the sets, balancing whimsy and architectural detail, as well as costumes for the Sugar Plum Fairy, the corps of waltzing flowers and beyond. But the biggest change (involving no less than 40 yards of fabric) is the costume for Mother Ginger, whose previous hoop skirt had seen many a tiny polichinelle pass through it during the past dozen years.

While this season brings some updates, the long-running production—now in its 28th year—doesn't stray too far from tradition. "The choreography is all original, yet it is based on the commitment to the classicism of ballet and the character and style of Tchaikovsky's beautiful score," says Mateo, who sees The Nutcracker as a rare tradition for his untraditional company. He's been keeping dancers on their toes since 1986, forgoing canonical story ballets such as Giselle or Romeo and Juliet in favor of a repertory of original works, so the sense of continuity in the company's 30th anniversary season is all the more gratifying. In fact, Mateo says some of the current dancers have parents who once performed in the holiday production. "In an age where ballet has splintered into so many styles, and the music is often taken for granted," he adds, "this reverent nod to tradition is a truly contemporary idea." / Sarah Hagman

More Hot Tickets

José Mateo isn't the only one tweaking tradition this season. Check out these other holiday happenings.

Boston Ballet's The Nutcracker The production only dates to 2012, but this edition does have a brand-new element: lighting by Bessie Award-winning Finnish designer Mikki Kunttu. It should help 68 company dancers and 200-plus Boston Ballet School students shine all the more. Nov. 27-Dec. 31 at the Boston Opera House. $35-$189 at bostonballet.org.

New Repertory Theatre's The Snow Queen It's the New England premiere of this pop-rock adaptation of Hans Christian Andersen's classic—the same source material as Frozen, which means the show may help you finally get "Let It Go" out of your head. Nov. 28-Dec. 20 at Watertown's Charles Mosesian Theater. $30-$59 at newrep.org.

Tir Na Productions' Return of the Winemaker: An Irish Christmas Comedy Not your typical holiday chestnut, this darkly funny show puts Jesus in Ballygoura instead of Bethlehem... and has him capitalizing on that water-into-wine talent. Dec. 2-20 at the Davis Square Theatre. $25 at winemaker.brownpapertickets.com.

The Bang Group's Nut/Cracked The New York company's offbeat Nutcracker remix adds in tap and disco, Duke Ellington and Glenn Miller's riffs on Tchaikovsky's score and supporting roles for bubble wrap and Chinese takeout. Dec. 18-20 at the ICA. $15-$25 at icoboston.org

A LITTLE ITALY: SRV will serve cicchetti, risotto, pasta and shareable plates with a Venetian influence.

First Taste / Matt Martinelli

AT YOUR SRV-ICE

THE CODA GROUP'S NEW VENTURE BRINGS VENETIAN VIBES TO THE SOUTH END.

Chefs Kevin O'Donnell and Michael Lombardi first worked together in Italy, so when they were scouting locations in the city for the latest restaurant from the Coda Group, they naturally settled on Italian cuisine. But it wasn't until they found a space in the South End that they decided on the bacaro, a traditional Venetian wine bar, as the model for the new SRV, which the co-executive chefs will open in early December. "There are a couple of Italian places in the South End. But this style of cooking, Venetian and tapas style, is something we thought would be awesome for the neighborhood," O'Donnell says.

SRV stands for "Serene Republic of Venice," and the pair aimed for an authentic Venetian vibe inside the bright space, which shines with a marble-top bar and tables, reclaimed wood floors, an exposed white ceiling, wrought-iron railing and full-length windows that let the sun splash in. The 45-seat private dining room displays succulents and wine bottles on the wall, while the bar area includes stand-up drinking rails, swinging stools and 14 bar seats. But the crown jewel is the 50-seat back patio with brick walls on all four sides.

"We fell in love with the back," O'Donnell admits. But the two chefs' excitement extends to two specific parts of the SRV kitchen. The first is the risotto station, where the rice dish will be made to order by a designated toque. And in the basement, there's a pasta room that will accommodate two people who'll mill grain, sift the resulting flour "00" style and turn it into hand-cut pasta.

"You can just close the door and make pasta," O'Donnell says. "And I'm really excited about risotto, cooking it to order. It's something not a lot of people have tasted before at a restaurant."

The pasta and risotto dishes will be found among about a dozen items on the grain section of SRV's menu. A shareable plates section features another dozen or so items that either use traditional Venetian ingredients, such as a radicchio, chorizo and chicory salad, or represent a translation of a classic Venetian dish, such as a roasted pumpkin and squash dish that's inspired by sweet pumpkins (suca baruca) available from street vendors in Venice. A cicchetti section is ideal for quick snacks alongside a small glass of wine (un'ombra).

"For me, when we lived in Europe, the places with standing and eating cicchetti were my favorite places to go," says Lombardi, who also worked in France. "You come in, you grab some wine and some cicchetti. For me, I'd be there at like 2 o'clock on a Saturday. It's part of a more sophisticated bar crawl."

The bar offerings include an all-Italian wine list, except for Champagne, and a drink program starring Italian liqueurs and one cocktail on tap, an Aperol spritz to start. A beer list curated by the Coda Group's Michael Moxley will include some hard-to-find Italian craft beers, which began to trickle through the country after the success of the American craft beer movement. It's that synergy between Italy and America that Lombardi wants to express at SRV.

"We're not trying to make you think you're in Venice," he says. "We're trying to cook and eat like we're in Boston, but we're completely influenced by that culture."

Good Eats: Beefed Up

"Too many spices to list" is how the menu describes the beef rendang at Kaki Lima, the Indonesian pop-up that takes over KO Pies' East Boston shipyard home on Mondays and Tuesdays. But if you ask Peter Gelling to elaborate on the version cooked by his wife, Retno Pratiwi, he'll happily rattle off a handful of spices: galangal, nutmeg, bird's eye chiles, kaffir lime leaves and turmeric leaves—an essential but tough-to-find ingredient that the couple grows at their nearby apartment. The payoff is marvelous, with an intricate, fragrant and incredibly rich "dry" braise that's completed by the accompanying jasmine rice, sweet pickled vegetables and grassy pepper-tomatillo sambal. / Elizabeth Bomze

Purveyors: Party Starters

SOIREE SUPPLIERS: Sierra Rothberg and Marie Zemler Wu are building buzz for Lusterity.

For two Dorchester moms, celebrating the 375th anniversary of the nation's oldest public school sparked an idea for something new. Marie Zemler Wu and Sierra Rothberg were so engrossed by party planning for their fête for Mather Elementary last year that they decided to start their own niche venture: Lusterity, an online one-stop party shop for products that are either handmade, sustainable, local or created by a nonprofit or minority-led company. Of course, Rothberg says, "It still has to be an amazing product or service." Lusterity, which made its first sale in October, offers everything from cake toppers to cheeky napkins, and it's already expanding. An online questionnaire will soon match planners with Lusterity-approved vendors, and workshops are on the books for December. "Our interest," Zemler Wu says, "is always in meeting other creatives who want to grow and shape their business in a community with other small businesses." / Meghan Kavanaugh

Wood Expressions cake stands made from fallen trees: "I don't even know if I want to sell them. I want to hoard them all for myself," Zemler Wu says.*

Brooklyn Slate Company cheese platters: "They own a quarry up in the northern part of New York, so they take some of the broken pieces of slate [to make] beautiful slate cheese platters of various sizes," Rothberg says.*

Rupalee scissors: "They're just a beautiful, hand-forged scissor, a super workhorse," Rothberg says. "Also, they've been in the same family for centuries."*

Drink of the Moment
SHERRY BABY

WHAT'S IN A NAME: This nod to Frankie Valli's 1960s hit fits in with the diner vibe at Veggie Galaxy, where cocktail consultants Harmony Kelly and Meaghan Sinclair of Booze Époque have been busy revamping the beverage program.

PRICE: $9

INGREDIENTS: FoMu vanilla ice cream, Mark's Chai Spice MEM tea, Oloroso sherry, rice milk, sprinkled nutmeg

TASTE: Creamy, nutty, spicy eggnog

PAIR IT WITH: Kelly would go for the stuffed French toast, Sinclair for the Central Square burger. Both agree on the cheese fries. (P.S.: The pair have just signed on for a cocktail and food pairing cookbook, slated for next year.)

TELL ME MORE: Boozy milkshakes won't be the only thing bringing lushes to the yard. Though the lack of a full liquor license was a challenge, Sinclair says, "We totally appreciate let's-sit-down-and-have-a-beer atmosphere." There's an all-New England brew list, including some elevated options like a cayenne-rimmed micheladа. The vino-inclined will find sangrias (one combines white wine with sake), and there's even what the duo dubs a "mom" drink, a salute to an Aperol spritz or Americano that features Casoni 1814 liqueur and is totally "something a mom would drink on a patio."

THE SCENE: Veggie Galaxy is quite literally raising the bar, as well as adding new seating and tables for a mini lounge atmosphere at the front of the diner. (Don't worry: The hypnotizing rotating dessert display remains.) That bar area and the new drink menu will debut the second week of December. Can't wait? Look for sneak peek drink specials during a soft launch that starts Nov. 30. / Soroh Hogmon

BEEK CHIC

When Brent Ridge and Josh Kilmer-Purcell, aka the Beekman Boys, bought a farm in upstate New York, they were urbanites seeking a country escape. Now they live year-round on the farm, where they create provisions and home goods for their Beekman 1802 line. At their current pop-up in the lobby of the Lenox Hotel, you'll find a curated selection of those wares, including a candle custom made for Boston. We got Ridge on the line from the farm to talk shop. / Alexondro Covollo

COUNTRY PRIDE: For more from Brent Ridge (right), head to improper.com.

HARDEST THING ABOUT LEARNING TO FARM? Finding out what to Google. Because almost everything we had to learn—farming, cheese-making, making soap—we started out by Googling it. And you'd be surprised by how much you can learn by watching a YouTube video.

BEST THING ABOUT FARM LIFE? We grow or raise about 90 percent of the food that we consume. So we are literally farm-to-our own table.

WAS IT HARD THE FIRST TIME YOU SLAUGHTERED AN ANIMAL? It's really hard. We cried—we still cry. Oddly, we don't cry when we have to do the chickens or the turkeys. The poultry don't really get you quite as emotional.

TELL US ABOUT THE PARTNERSHIP WITH THE LENOX. They started working with us last year when they brought in our hotel amenity line, all of which is made with goat milk. We worked with them to create dispensers for the rooms.

So they're going to put 200,000 fewer bottles into landfills this year

HOW DID YOU DISCOVER THAT GOAT MILK WAS GOOD FOR THE SKIN? We Googled it. [Laughs.] A local farmer was moving his farm and asked if he could bring his goats to our property to graze. We allowed him to do that, and shortly after that, in the recession of 2008, we both lost our jobs and had to figure out a way to make the farm sustain itself. So we were just Googling "What can you make with goat milk?" It turns out that goat milk has the same pH as human skin, so it's really moisturizing.

YOU GUYS COMPETED ON THE AMAZING RACE—AND WON! WHAT WAS THAT LIKE? It was terrible, until the last 30 seconds! But the most amazing thing was when we were in Indonesia. Before we left we printed "Beekman Boys" on our T-shirts, so that when we were on TV people would see it. So we were in Indonesia and had just finished a terrible task that had depleted every bit of energy we had. It was like 110 degrees, and I think at that point we were in, like, last place. We were running down this little alleyway, and all these little kids came out from school and read our shirts and started chanting, "Beekman Boys! Beekman Boys!" That really gave us a breath of life

IF YOU COULD BE ON ANOTHER REALITY SHOW, WHAT WOULD IT BE? For me it would be Dancing with the Stars. Not because I'm a good dancer, but because I love learning things and they get to learn all those dances in just a couple months

Oh shit: Winter is almost here! Not to worry: Christina Fagan has you—and your noggin'—covered with her line of high-end knitwear, Shit That I Knit. The 26-year-old entrepreneur and self-described "weirdo" amassed a team of talented knitters in their 20s and 30s from across New England. "They all have really cool day jobs and knit on their way to work, while getting pedicures or even at a bar or a party. Knitting, like many other hobbies, is a creative expression," Fagan says. Now her crew crafts beanies, scarves and sweaters from wool "sheared off cute li'l free-range sheep in Peru, then hand-dyed in small batches." In October, Fagan surpassed a Kickstarter goal of $25,000, which she plans to use to expand Shit That I Knit's brand by renting studio space and hiring a professional photographer to better showcase their luxe knits. MARYS QUITE CONTRARY

A LOCAL AUTHOR PAINTS A VIVID PORTRAIT OF A DARING MOTHER-DAUGHTER PAIR.

Romantic Outlaws* by Charlotte Gordon
Published by Random House, 672 pages, $30

WITH ZESTY ENERGY, LOCAL historian Charlotte Gordon tells this story of two Marys. Mother Mary Wollstonecraft, author of the landmark 1792 work A Vindication of the Rights of Woman, died soon after the birth of her second child. This daughter, Mary, became the author of Frankenstein and the wife of Romantic poet Percy Bysshe Shelley. Though separated by death, both Marys had similar literary, ideological and romantic lives, fraught and colorful.

Gordon, who teaches English at Endicott College, turns from one Mary to the other in alternating chapters, where we see Wollstonecraft as a passionate proponent of modern-style feminism and the shunned mother of one illegitimate child. Later, she wed radical political philosopher William Godwin, though both were against the traditional constraints of marriage. Legitimate Mary follows, and her politics are just as progressive, her relationships no less complicated. Poet Shelley, romantic on the page, was irresponsible and selfish at home, and the couple rambled internationally alongside Lord Byron in a circle reviled as the "League of Incest." Adultery, the deaths of children, suicide and anguish prevailed.

Gordon starkly and sorrowfully reports how the work of these Marys, who advocated fervently for the rights of women and other political causes, were misinterpreted and underappreciated for nearly 200 years. Still, the everyday poetry of their letters and diaries—alongside Gordon's own literary vivacity—makes every page feel like a compressed novel.

FROM PAGE 389: Sexual intimacy became a kind of chessboard, a test of strategy. For Godwin, whose father "was so puritanical that he considered the fondling of a cat a profanation of the Lord's Day," it seemed shocking to act on his sensual impulses. Mary, on the other hand, felt ready to plunge forward and was disappointed with Godwin's restraint. She began to refer to him as "your sapient Philosophership," partly in jest, but also to provoke him to display his feelings more openly. ◆

Traveler's Checks

For a boutique hotel experience, check into the Park Plaza Hotel in Winter Park, a ritzy suburb just a few miles north of Orlando.

Undecided on dinner? The Mills 50 district is a T-shaped section of Orlando with a high concentration of some of the city's best restaurants, cafes, bars and businesses. It's a safe bet to set as a base, so tell your Uber driver to pull over when you see Mills 50 flags on lampposts.

MAGIC KINGDOM: Skip the theme parks in favor of sunning, sightseeing and dining on Mamak's Asian street eats.

The Escape Artist / Renata Certo-Ware

ORLANDO IN BLOOM

YES, A TRIP TO THE CITY BEAUTIFUL CAN BE COMPLETE WITHOUT A STOP AT DISNEY.

"Oh, you live in Orlando? So you must be at Disney World pretty often, huh?" is a question locals get asked. All. The. Time. The answer? A simple "no" sums it up. The fact is, there's so much to do in "The City Beautiful" that you could easily spend an entire trip to Orlando embarking on botanical strolls, scoping out adorable bungalows and stuffing yourself silly on culinary delights—and skip the Magic Kingdom altogether.

But before you hit the (O-)town, get those bags checked in. There aren't a ton of hotel choices in downtown Orlando, mostly because so many are situated closer to the theme parks about 20 miles southwest. But if you do opt for a stay in the city, the Grand Bohemian Hotel, run by Marriott, is a good way to go. In terms of decor, the Grand Bohemian is a suitable substitute for Disney; it's somewhere between Liberace and Versace, with a distinctly art deco spin. Velvet-accented rooms are each punctuated with a tufted headboard that the Queen of Hearts herself would surely try to slip into her suitcase, and the common areas also center on bold pattern-play and jewel-toned color schemes. You'll definitely want to carve out time to lounge by the pool on the hotel's white-washed rooftop, which offers a 360-degree view of the city.

Start your day by swinging into Propagation for a top-notch cappuccino, made with locally roasted coffee beans and served with a side of minimalist design; the cafe-slash-studio stocks a curated selection of midcentury furniture that you'll want to ship home. Alternatively, another great spot is Downtown Credo, a nonprofit cafe that leaves it up to the customers to determine how much to pay for cold-brewed coffee, cafe con leche and more. (Don't worry about awkwardness; suggested prices are provided.)

Once you're properly caffeinated, a stroll through the Harry P. Leu Gardens is not to be missed. One of a number of botanical gardens in Orlando—the tropical, rainy weather really lends itself to some fanciful flora—the property features 50 acres of gardens and forest, all easily navigable on foot via smooth walking trails and shaded by countless varieties of bamboo and trees ranging from oak to palm. Be sure to stop by the citrus grove and the rose, herb and butterfly gardens.

You've seen the flora; now head over to Lake Eola in the heart of Orlando's Downtown District for some fauna. Enclosed by a park and a walking trail, the lake positively teems with wildlife, including flocks of swans, ducks and ibises—just don't expect them to shuffle out of the way for pedestrians. You can get even closer to the action (and channel a bit of Boston in O-Town) by renting one of the swan boats for a spin. The lake is actually a sinkhole, for which Florida, for better or worse, is now famous, so you can tell people back home that you survived a sinkhole via swan boat.

There's also a little-known literary connection between Massachusetts and Orlando: Lowell native Jack Kerouac lived in a sweet little bungalow in the College Park neighborhood, and it was here that he penned The Dharma Bums. Thanks to the Kerouac Project, the house now plays host to a new resident writer each season, so it's not open to the public. That said, a quick drive-by is totally worth it, if only to scope out the neighborhood and the massive, Spanish moss-covered oak tree that looms above the home, its muscled limbs extending clear across the street.

Time to eat. Orlando doesn't get nearly enough credit for a stellar food-and-drink scene fueled by Cuban and South American classics, craft beer and Asian eats, to name just a few of the global influences. Black Bean Deli serves up casual Cuban fare on aluminum trays. Go for a platter, which includes chicken, beef or papas rellenas with plantains, beans, rice and a salad, but save room for dessert—there are always a few flavors of flan on hand, plus a solid selection of craft cans to wash it all down. Half a mile along on East Colonial Drive (but worlds away in flavor) is Mamak, which specializes in Asian street food. Grab a table or sidle up to a spot at the communal high-tops and tuck into classic comfort foods like tom yum mee soup or fusion favorites like fries tossed with five-spice seasoning. And do not miss the chance to tipple at Hanson's Shoe Repair, a brick-walled speakeasy in the heart of the city. The ultra-cool ambiance is topped only by the expertly crafted cocktails, but beware: To get in, you must have the "password" down pat. A quick call to the bar's (sorry, the shoe repair's) landline will go to voicemail, which provides the nightly password.

All that walking, eating and cocktailing (with nary a theme park meltdown) means you should sleep well—and wake up hungry. Brunch, anyone? Santiago's Bodega has an epic all-you-can-eat brunch, complete with bottomless mimosas and sangria, for $40. Or you can partake in something a little lighter just a few paces away at Ten10 Brewery, a months-old microbrewery that pairs beer with fresh doughnuts every Sunday morning starting at 11:30 am, giving the hair-of-the-dog a sweet spin. ◆

SEX ON A PLATTER

YVONNE'S BRINGS CHEEKY, MODERN GLAMOUR TO A STORIED DOWNTOWN LOCATION.

When old-money dining institution Locke-Ober closed in 2012, it marked the end of several eras: the sunset of jackets-required dining in Boston, another bridge to Camelot gone, one less Boston restaurant with 19th-century roots. The ancient temple to Brahmin manners, silver-salver service and fusty Continental cuisine had become obsolete. But as budding skyscrapers now creep upward all across downtown, new owners have transformed the late grande dame into hot debutante Yvonne's, and she's already Boston's Miss Thing: boisterous, flamboyant, chic and sexy as hell.

One enters the self-styled "supper club" via a tiny outer foyer where the doorperson phones inside to see if you can be admitted, then ushers you to an inner host stand. This feels like sensible crowd control when the place is packed, but silly velvet-rope kabuki when it's emptier. But the rooms—a larger bar/dining room, another smaller, library-themed fireplace-equipped one, and a cozy connecting lounge—are stunning, a crazy-quilt fusion of Locke-Ober's handsome Victorian mahogany fixtures and florid new accents: flocked wallpaper here, glowing pressed-tin ceilings there, crystal chandeliers, marble-topped bars, plush upholstered banquettes. The space softens its envious nostalgia for hoary Beacon Hill luxury with cheeky, modern irony. Locke-Ober's famous oil painting, Mlle. Yvonne, a classical nude hoisting a chalice, is burlesqued here as a naked babe taking a brazen selfie.

Under the management of Will Thompson (ex-Drink), those gorgeous bars are staffed with well-trained craft bartenders pouring beautifully presented drinks, like the Ladder District ($12) of rye, Calvados, cinnamon and bitters with a giant ice cube, and the bubbly Miner's Club ($10) of Benedictine, gin, lime, sweet spices and pear cider. If those seem too sophisticated, there are fruity, giant-format cocktails for sharing with several friends, like the Standard Punch of rye, raspberry, lemon, oolong, sage and soda ($95). Careful: These may be elegant updates on Scorpion Bowls, but they're still potent. The beer list boasts a tight 15 options ($5-$9) tilting to crowd-pleasing refreshment, though more flavorful exceptions like St.-Feuillien saison ($8) can be found. Nineteen wines by the glass ($11-$24) and 120 in bottles ($36-$600, mostly under $100) neatly span Old and New Worlds at reasonably fair prices. Given Yvonne's nightclub-like trappings, this is a surprisingly serious, grownup beverage program.

Chefs Tom Berry and Juan Pedrosa have assembled an eclectic menu with a spectrum of plates from teensy to titanic. On the small side, pumpkin hummus ($9) with pomegranate, Parmesan and smoked pepitas offers a pretty plate with lovely contrasting flavors and textures. Baked oysters "Savannah" ($12) tops two oysters with a creamy gratin of lobster and mushrooms: rich and delectable, but gone in an instant. Provoleta ($10) likewise feels tiny, a little skillet of baked cheese with a dollop of chimichurri for spreading on grilled bread. Kentucky "prosciutto" toast ($12) is topped with excellently smoky/salty country ham, but is another expensive couple of bites.

Larger plates feel like better values. Chicken and quinoa meatballs ($14) feature a crunchy coating and a sweet/savory/tangy glaze, fabulous one night but oversalted on another. The kitchen consistently hits its vividly composed, crunchily accented vegetarian options out of the park, as in seared king trumpet mushrooms ($14) with sumac yoghurt and crisp cauliflower; seared halloumi cheese ($13) with charred eggplant, fried chickpeas and honey; kale and orzo salad ($12) with roasted Brussels sprouts, grilled radicchio, burnt raisins and sunflower seeds; and corn and farro salad ($12) with arugula, smoked blue cheese, pickled peaches and pistachios. "Tico" tuna crudo ($17) makes the currently common mistake of overwhelming its raw fish with too many adornments, but the superb grilled octopus ($18) makes for a meaty composed salad of gigante beans, fennel, grapefruit and punchy smoked harissa.

Medium-crust flatbread pizzas (described as pitas) are another value. The lamb sausage pita ($16) with spicy tomato sauce, zucchini, harissa-fennel pickles, yoghurt and feta is terrific, though a similar pile-up of ingredients on the K.F.C. pita ($15) undermines the key virtue of its Korean-style fried chicken, turning its ultra-crisp skin soggy.

The most dramatic dishes are meant for sharing among several friends, as in the beautiful family-style rolled flank roast that is grilled beef matambre ($95), stuffed with red chile, salami and provolone, sliced and nestled atop Parmesan polenta, drizzled with a rich gravy and brightened with a side of chimichurri. Another head-turner is the grilled "viper" chop ($95), a loooong dish of slow-cooked pork short ribs on kimchee fried rice, with a fiery gochuchang-based sauce and flecks of fried shallots and sesame seeds. Save room for Kate Holowchik's witty, fun desserts, like doughnuts ($9) with dollops of blood orange curd and a side of coconut-miso ice cream, or an oversized macaron ice cream sandwich ($4) with PB&J ice cream.

Given the early mob scenes, there's evident demand for Yvonne's glamorous melange of olde and new. The great cocktails and mostly delicious food in those incredible rooms can be intoxicating. The only needle scratch on a typically giddy, clamorous evening here may come with the check: Those costly little plates can quickly mount up, while a "kitchen appreciation" surcharge adds another 3 percent to the food tab. Yvonne's is a ton of noisy fun, maybe the most seductive It Girl to hit Boston in a long while, but hanging out with her ain't cheap. ◆

ON THE ROAD AGAIN

HIGHLIGHTS FROM HIGH SOCIETY

➜ The Asian Task Force Against Domestic Violence held its 22nd annual Silk Road Gala a the John Joseph Moakley United States Courthouse on Oct. 24. Some 400 guests enjoyed food from local chefs and performances by local entertainers at a night market-themed reception, followed by a seated dinner, a silent auction and a performance by singer Lariss Lam. The evening raised $260,000 for programs preventing domestic violence in Asian families and communities.

➜ On Oct. 23, 300 women gathered at the Boston Harbor Hotel for the Hot Pink Luncheon & Symposium, which included a Neiman Marcus fashion show and a panel discussion. This year, the Breast Cancer Research Foundation has funded 240 research projects, and the event's guests raised $325,000 for breast cancer research in New England.

ASK CHERYL

Q: I AM IN PRETTY GOOD SHAPE, BUT NO MATTER HOW HARD I WORK OUT I HAVE A TUMMY PAUNCH. WHAT DO YOU SUGGEST?

A: We have two great options for eliminating that stubborn tummy fat, which is very common in men and women of all ages.

When you are standing up, if you are able to pinch an inch or two of fat on your stomach you are a good candidate for RF fat removal. We can melt it away utilizing RF (radio frequency) technology. RF energy creates deep tissue heating, which breaks down the fat cells and liquefies the fat, which your body then eliminates.

If you have two or more inches of pinchable fat, we may suggest CoolSculpting, which uses controlled cooling to freeze and kill fat cells. Both RF and Coolsculpting can be used on most parts of the body to destroy fat cells.

Both of these non-surgical, non-invasive procedures are safe, quick, and highly effective for reducing excess tummy fat.

A REAL KNOCKOUT

RYAN COOGLER LANDS A CROWD-PLEASING HIT WITH HIS ROCKY REBIRTH.

BEFORE READING ANY FARTHER, PEEK AT the star rating attached to this review. No, your eyes don't deceive you. I've awarded my highest rating to cowriter/director Ryan Coogler's cinematic underdog, a series rebirth that also serves as the seventh installment in the Rocky franchise that began in 1976 with John G. Avildsen's original film.

And Rocky was an original—a drama about a kind-hearted boxer that became so associated with star Sylvester Stallone, it's easy to forget he wrote the Oscar-nominated screenplay. Poke fun at the lesser sequels, but know that Avildsen's charmer took home three of the 10 Academy Awards it was nominated for: Best Picture, Best Director and Best Editing.

If Creed hits audiences as hard as actor Michael B. Jordan's punches connect with his opponents onscreen, then this picture could collect its own Oscar gold come February. The preview audience I viewed this crowd-pleaser with were alternately cheering and shedding tears—and I was glassy-eyed and ready to pump my fists right along with them, critical composure be damned.

This is a real testament to Coogler, the 29-year-old who's following through on the promise he showed in his writing/directing debut, 2013's Fruitvale Station, the fact-based drama that also featured Jordan in its lead role; one can easily see Jordan becoming the Leonardo DiCaprio to Coogler's Martin Scorsese. You may scoff at the comparison, but I expect great things from the 28-year-old Jordan, who could finally become a star with this film after surviving this summer's Fantastic Four, a folly that demonstrates what can happen when a studio loses faith in its filmmaker. Ah, but Creed's producers (including Stallone and original Rocky producers Irwin Winkler and the late Robert Chartoff) were absolutely correct in green-lighting Coogler's story idea—and then giving him the berth to make the picture he'd envisioned.

And even Scorsese would appreciate Coogler's staging of the first major fight sequence, which is captured in one unbroken shot by cinematographer Maryse Alberti, who shot both 1996's When We Were Kings (Leon Gast's documentary detailing the 1974 Rumble in the Jungle between George Foreman and Muhammad Ali) and 2008's The Wrestler (Darren Aronofsky's drama involving another faded pugilist). She unobtrusively moves her steadicam through the action, which has been so well-choreographed and executed by Coogler that I quite literally had to catch my breath at scene's end. This kid's got talent.

One can easily see Jordan becoming the Leonardo DiCaprio to Coogler's Martin Scorsesc.

So does "Hollywood" Donnie Johnson. We're introduced to the future light heavyweight contender during a prologue set in 1998, when he's a newly orphaned 12-year-old (played by Alex Henderson) in Los Angeles' Juvenile Detention Center. He's visited by Mary Anne Creed (Phylicia Rashad, bringing warmth to a role originated by Sylvia Meals in the earlier Rocky pictures). She's here to adopt the illegitimate son of her late husband, a heavyweight champ who was killed in the ring before Donnie was born. Knowing nothing about the man she says was his father, the young boy asks, "What was his name?" Cue the film's title card.

Yes, his father was Apollo Creed (Carl Weathers), and Donnie's given name is actually—and fittingly—Adonis. And although he never knew the man, he's followed in Apollo's footsteps, as we see when the movie jumps to the present and Donnie (now played by Jordan) wins his 15th match in Mexico.

Leaving behind a promising office job in L.A., Donnie heads to Apollo's hometown of Philadelphia, where he seeks out Rocky Balboa, his father's best-known opponent—and later best friend. Now nearly 70, the former heavyweight champ still runs the small Italian restaurant named after his beloved late wife Adrian, and Donnie stirs up a lot of old memories in the "Italian Stallion" as he introduces himself—and asks Rocky to train him.

That's right: Donnie wants Rocky to be his Mickey Goldmill. (Stallone is now the same age Burgess Meredith was when he played Rocky's salty trainer.) Once you recall that Apollo took over for Mickey after the old man's death, the symmetry of this proposal makes it seem like the biggest fight will be a battle against the cliches hammered home in the six preceding Rocky films, especially after Donnie falls into a relationship with Bianca (Selma's Tessa Thompson), a singer suffering from progressive hearing loss.

The young lovers are two sides of the same coin—damaged by fate, both striving to be their best selves for as long as they're able. Bianca is Donnie's Adrian, even if their relationship has less weight than the anchor that grounded Avildsen's '76 original.

But like Avildsen's film, Creed features a superb score, this one by Ludwig Göransson, who also served as composer on Fruitvale Station. He subtly nods to Bill Conti's music in the earlier pictures, creating something new while invoking the past.

It's a delicate bit of shadowboxing, and no one here handles the punches better than Stallone, whose superb performance as Rocky encompasses the pain of families lost and the transcendence of discovering kin you never knew were there. ◆

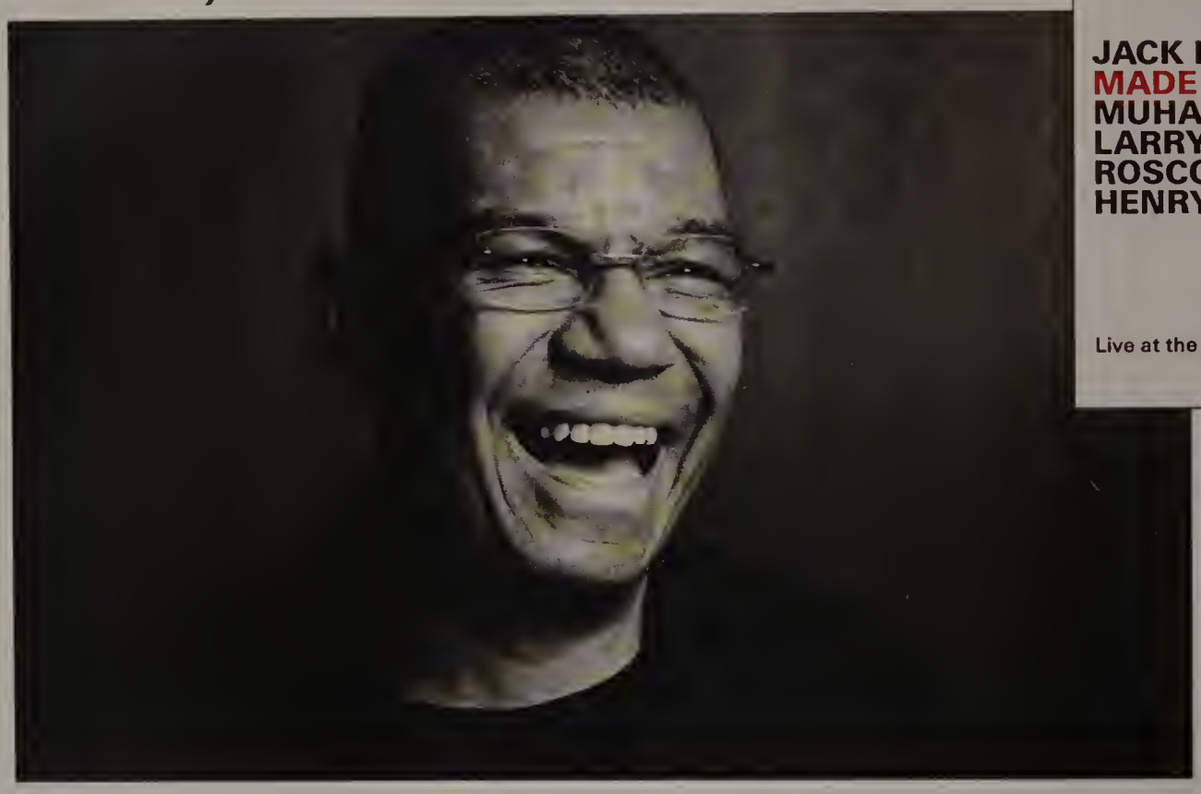
IMPORTED FROM IRELAND

Dream Catcher®

Legendary Toasted Chestnut Liqueur

The origins of Dream Catcher, an old Gaelic recipe, started in a historic farm house with a pot still in County Cavan, Ireland.

A farmer was inspired to blend an elixir of the natural flavor of toasted chestnuts and other natural flavors with select Irish Spirits to create the superb taste of a toasted Irish Liqueur. This wonderful treasure was discovered several years ago and is now coming to the world.



The farmer claimed it was a "Dream worth catching".

Dream Catcher Hot Chestnut

Pour a shot of Dream Catcher into a brandy glass. Top with an equal part of very hot water. Savor the spectacular, warm taste of toasted chestnuts with select Irish Spirits.

THE JACK DEJOHNETTE TRIO plays the Berklee Performance Center on Dec. 4.

Music / Paul Robicheau

KEY STROKES

A SEMINAL JAZZ DRUMMER TAPS THE TALENTED OFFSPRING OF FAMED ASSOCIATES.

JACK DEJOHNETTE'S DRUMMING HAS HELPED propel many of the greatest combos in the evolution of jazz. He's probably best known for cutting funk-rock beats behind Miles Davis on fusion landmarks like Bitches Brew and Live-Evil. Yet DeJohnette also put impressionistic swing into Keith Jarrett's three-decade standards trio, joined Ornette Coleman and Pat Metheny in the free-jazz summit Song X, and made notable albums with Charles Lloyd, Michael Brecker and Sonny Rollins. And fewer people realize that among his work with jazz giants, including his diverse projects as a bandleader and composer, DeJohnette briefly played with John Coltrane in the sax icon's mid-'60s ensemble.

"My first time playing with him was being in the right place at the right time, in a small club in Chicago, when Elvin [Jones] was late for the last set," says DeJohnette, 73. "The owner told Coltrane that I was a good drummer and let me sit in. So I got to play three tunes with the quartet. Of course that was a very confidence-building experience."

Today, his projects include a trio with Coltrane's son, sax scion Ravi Coltrane, and electric bassist Matthew Garrison, whose father, Jimmy, also played acoustic bass in the John Coltrane Quartet. "You can see a continuation of the musical legacy," the drummer says, "but it's also trying to accomplish a musical voice as an entity, as the three of us."

They just recorded an album for April release on the ECM label as DeJohnette-Coltrane-Garrison. And the trio play the Berklee Performance Center on Dec. 4, mixing what the drummer calls "spontaneous improvised pieces" with originals and standards, including pop tunes. "We have a chemistry, a spiritual connection and a love for all kinds of music," DeJohnette says from a hotel in central France. "The last time, we played [Yes'] 'Owner of a Lonely Heart' against a Charlie Parker segment, so we kind of morphed both of them. It's free, but it also has discipline."

"Within a month, I developed coordination on [drums] and just kept working at it. I practiced four hours on drums and four hours on piano, and over time, I started working on both."

The group also applies technology. "Matthew's very adept with electronics and uses a computer for his bass, and I have some electronic gadgets that I use for percussion," says DeJohnette, who adds acoustic piano, while Coltrane swaps tenor, soprano and sopranino saxophones. "So there's a lot of different colors."

DeJohnette has played piano with other projects, but in April, he's also releasing his first solo piano album, Return, on the French vinyl-only label Newvelle. "I have my own voice," he says of his original instrument from classical studies as a child. DeJohnette led small jazz groups as a pianist around his native Chicago before he was drawn to a kit that his drummer hadn't taken home. "My uncle was a jazz DJ, so I had access to a lot of jazz records," he says. "Within a month, I developed coordination on [drums] and just kept working at it. I practiced four hours on drums and four hours on piano, and over time, I started working on both."

Even when he plays tightly tuned drum heads and cymbals at his kit, DeJohnette tends to punctuate the music with melodic and percussive tones that reflect the orchestral approach of a pianist. "It's like a painter with a palette," he says. "I think of myself more as a colorist than a drummer."

That palette has only grown broader in recent years. In 2009, DeJohnette finally won a Grammy, clinching Best New Age Album with his meditative Peace Time, flowing with the ambient sounds of hand percussion and flute-like synthesizer. He hit another extreme this past January with the release of Made in Chicago, a free-blowing live set with avant-garde hometown peers Henry Threadgill, Roscoe Mitchell and Muhal Richards Abrams. And that was a far cry from 2012's Sound Travels, which featured singers and Latin rhythms—and a new generation of musicians led by the Grammys' 2011 Best New Artist, Esperanza Spalding.

"I learn from the younger musicians too," DeJohnette says. "It's part of the tradition. Like any art form, you pass things on, and you exchange." ◆

CRASH 'N' LEARN

MY ATTEMPT TO INFILTRATE DRIVER'S ED FOR THE SPY SET.

With my wife, Heather, pursuing her nurse practitioner degree, parts of our house sometimes look like a really lame dorm room—all the textbooks and notes, none of the bongs. What? No, that's a vase, Mom. That thing sticking off the side is for adding water for the flowers.

Anyway, with Heather getting all smart about medicine and learning how to do prostate exams (turns out there's a cooperative fella who volunteers as a test subject, to the tune of 12 in one afternoon), I figured I should pursue some continuing education myself. Problem is, I'm a writer, and where that area's concerned I'm pretty much set. Listen, son, I've forgotten more about writing than you'll ever know about the reproductive habits of salamanders. That's called a metaphor. Or maybe an analogy? I told you, I've forgotten a lot about writing.

So I went in a different educational direction and signed up for a two-day Super-Secret Spy School. When you're in my line of work, it behooves you to know how to handle yourself when you're in a choke point at an orange readiness level. Don't know what I'm talking about? That's OK. It's just spy stuff. No big deal. Not everyone has my level of training.

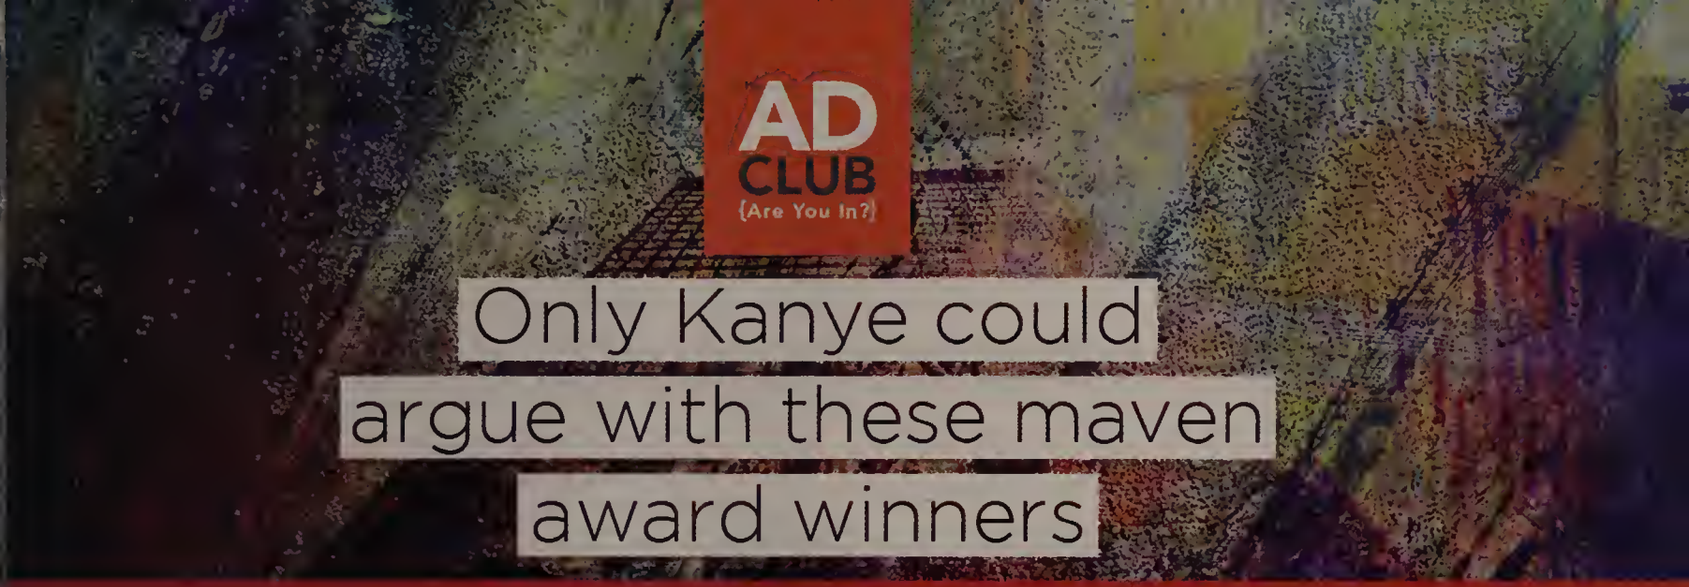
The formal name of the S.S. Spy School is the BSR Evasive Driving Course, held in Summit Point, West Virginia. They actually don't make any claims about spy skills, but essentially you're learning how to be Jason Bourne. You'll have bad guys chasing you, and when you make a wrong decision your instructor might say, "Hey, can you write a note to my family? Because we're all dead." That's something I never heard during the previous toughest course I ever took, "English 318: Dating and Relationships in 18th-Century British Literature."

My classmates had somewhat different backgrounds. A woman from the ATF asked me what I was doing there, and I confessed to being the only non-badass in the group. "You're the only one here who'd admit that," she replied, like a total badass. Then we went outside and learned about car bombs. Spy Tip No. 1: If your car has a six-cylinder engine and you look under the hood and count seven spark plug wires, that might be a good time to call Avis and book a different car.

The running theme at BSR is that you should be extremely skeptical of basically everybody. Is it paranoid to think that a woman with a baby stroller crossing your path might actually be wheeling around a shotgun? That trick was used during an attack in Europe in the '70s. Is it paranoid to think that a guy flashing his headlights is signaling someone else to initiate an ambush? Not in Iraq, it's not. Entering the BSR mindset makes me happy to live in a land where baby strollers are just baby strollers and flashing headlights are just gang initiation procedures, according to an email I got from my cousin.

While some of the course focused on situational awareness, that wasn't really the fun part. The fun part was fighting back. Specifically: car ramming. Our whole lives, we're taught not to crash into anything. Which, in the context of your Jason Bourne mission, is exactly why you do it. The bad guy with his car blocking the road thinks you'll respect his Mazda Millenia. So he'll be real surprised when you roll within 15 feet and then suddenly floor it.

The running theme at BSR is that you should be extremely skeptical of basically everybody.



It turns out that if you hit a car near its trunk, it pivots out of the way pretty easily, at least when you've got a beefy old Buick LeSabre for a battering ram. Also, you can spin a moving car by nudging its rear fender, steering into it and hitting the gas. This is great entertainment when you're the aggressor; it's less fun when you're riding in the back seat of a beater Volvo and you're suddenly twirling a 180 with a malicious Oldsmobile coming at you. In any case, the problem with acquiring these skills is that the next time you see someone dawdling in the left lane of I-93 or parked across two spaces at Home Depot, you'll think, "I have a great solution for this!"

Ramming cars is probably not something you need to do on a daily basis—no more than once or twice a month, tops. Then again, how often does my daily routine require a reference to 18th-century British literature? Twice so far today! See, you never know when you'll need to call upon your education, whatever it is. So if you're my neighbor and you see me back out of my driveway at 30 mph, then suddenly spin the car in a J-turn and speed off in a cloud of vaporized rubber, please understand that I'm not goofing around, terrorizing the neighborhood or unleashing my inner juvenile delinquent. I'm studying. ◆

Soroff On / Emily Deschanel

NO BONES ABOUT IT

THE TV STAR TALKS ABOUT TRUE CRIMES, HER PASSION FOR ANIMAL RIGHTS AND HER FAMOUS FAMILY MEMBERS

SINCE 2005, BOSTON UNIVERSITY GRADUATE EMILY Deschanel, 39, has starred on the Fox crime procedural Bones as Temperance Brennan, a forensic anthropologist who writes novels on the side. A Los Angeles native, she is the daughter of award-winning cinematographer Caleb Deschanel and actress Mary Jo Deschanel and the sister of actress Zooey Deschanel. She's appeared in numerous other films and television shows and is an avid animal-rights activist and vegan. She lives in Los Angeles with her husband and two children.

JONATHAN SOROFF: So how do you do it with two kids? The youngest is only 5 months?
EMILY DESCHANEL: And a 4-year-old, yeah. How do I have it all? I don't. I'm constantly trying to balance things, and sometimes I'm in tears that I won't see my kids. I'm just trying to survive or get it all done, and it's definitely challenging.

Strangest thing about being a Hollywood kid when you came to Boston? I'm not sure I consider myself a Hollywood kid, and I'm not sure it's weird, but I love Boston accents. That's my favorite. But at BU, we had a dialect class, and even the teacher couldn't do a Boston accent. She made a girl from Boston do it for us.

If you had a daughter, would you ever name her Temperance? No. [Laughs.] I think not. That would be kind of crazy. But I do have a son named Henry, and my character now has a son named Hank. That's as comfortable as I feel with the characters' names overlapping real life.

So are you squeamish? No. I'll watch surgery, and I like the forensics shows. I've been to the morgue and seen autopsies. That said, I almost fainted when my son needed stitches in his chin. They had to get me a juice box. So I guess I'm very squeamish when it comes to my own children.

How hard did you have to study for this role? I got all these books on forensic anthropology, and forensics in general, and I kinda had the basis for certain terminology that I'd be using. So I learned about the basics. Now I know a lot of the bones in the body.

So you must kill when you sing "The knee bone's connected to the shin bone..." Yup. It's "The patella's connected to the femur..." We did a show last season where I rewrote that song. It's either 206 or 208 bones in the body, depending on who's counting. We did an episode where we named every bone in the body.

Most dire animal rights abuse happening now? There are so many horrible things happening to animals in the world. I concentrate on the 10 billion animals that are raised and killed for food in this country on factory farms. The number is so large. It doesn't get the attention it deserves. People don't want to hear about it. But the environmental impact and the impact on people's health, never mind the cruelty these animals face, is where I pay the most attention.

So have you ever solved a crime in real life? I think I solve many crimes all the time. We cook up little mysteries for my son to solve, because he loves it. But I solve the mystery of "Where's my phone?" every day. I lose it on a daily basis.

"I solve many crimes all the time.... I solve the mystery of 'Where's my phone?' every day. I lose it on a daily basis."

Do you think you'll ever work with your father, mother and sister? Well, my dad directed an episode of Bones, my sister appeared on an episode, and I was just saying to the producer that we need to get my mom on. So maybe not at the same time, but hopefully, yes.

Favorite film of your father's? Being There.

Of your sister's? Elf. Of your own? Oh, I don't know. What can I say? I had such a small part in it, but Cold Mountain. Or do I be a smartass and say Boogeyman?

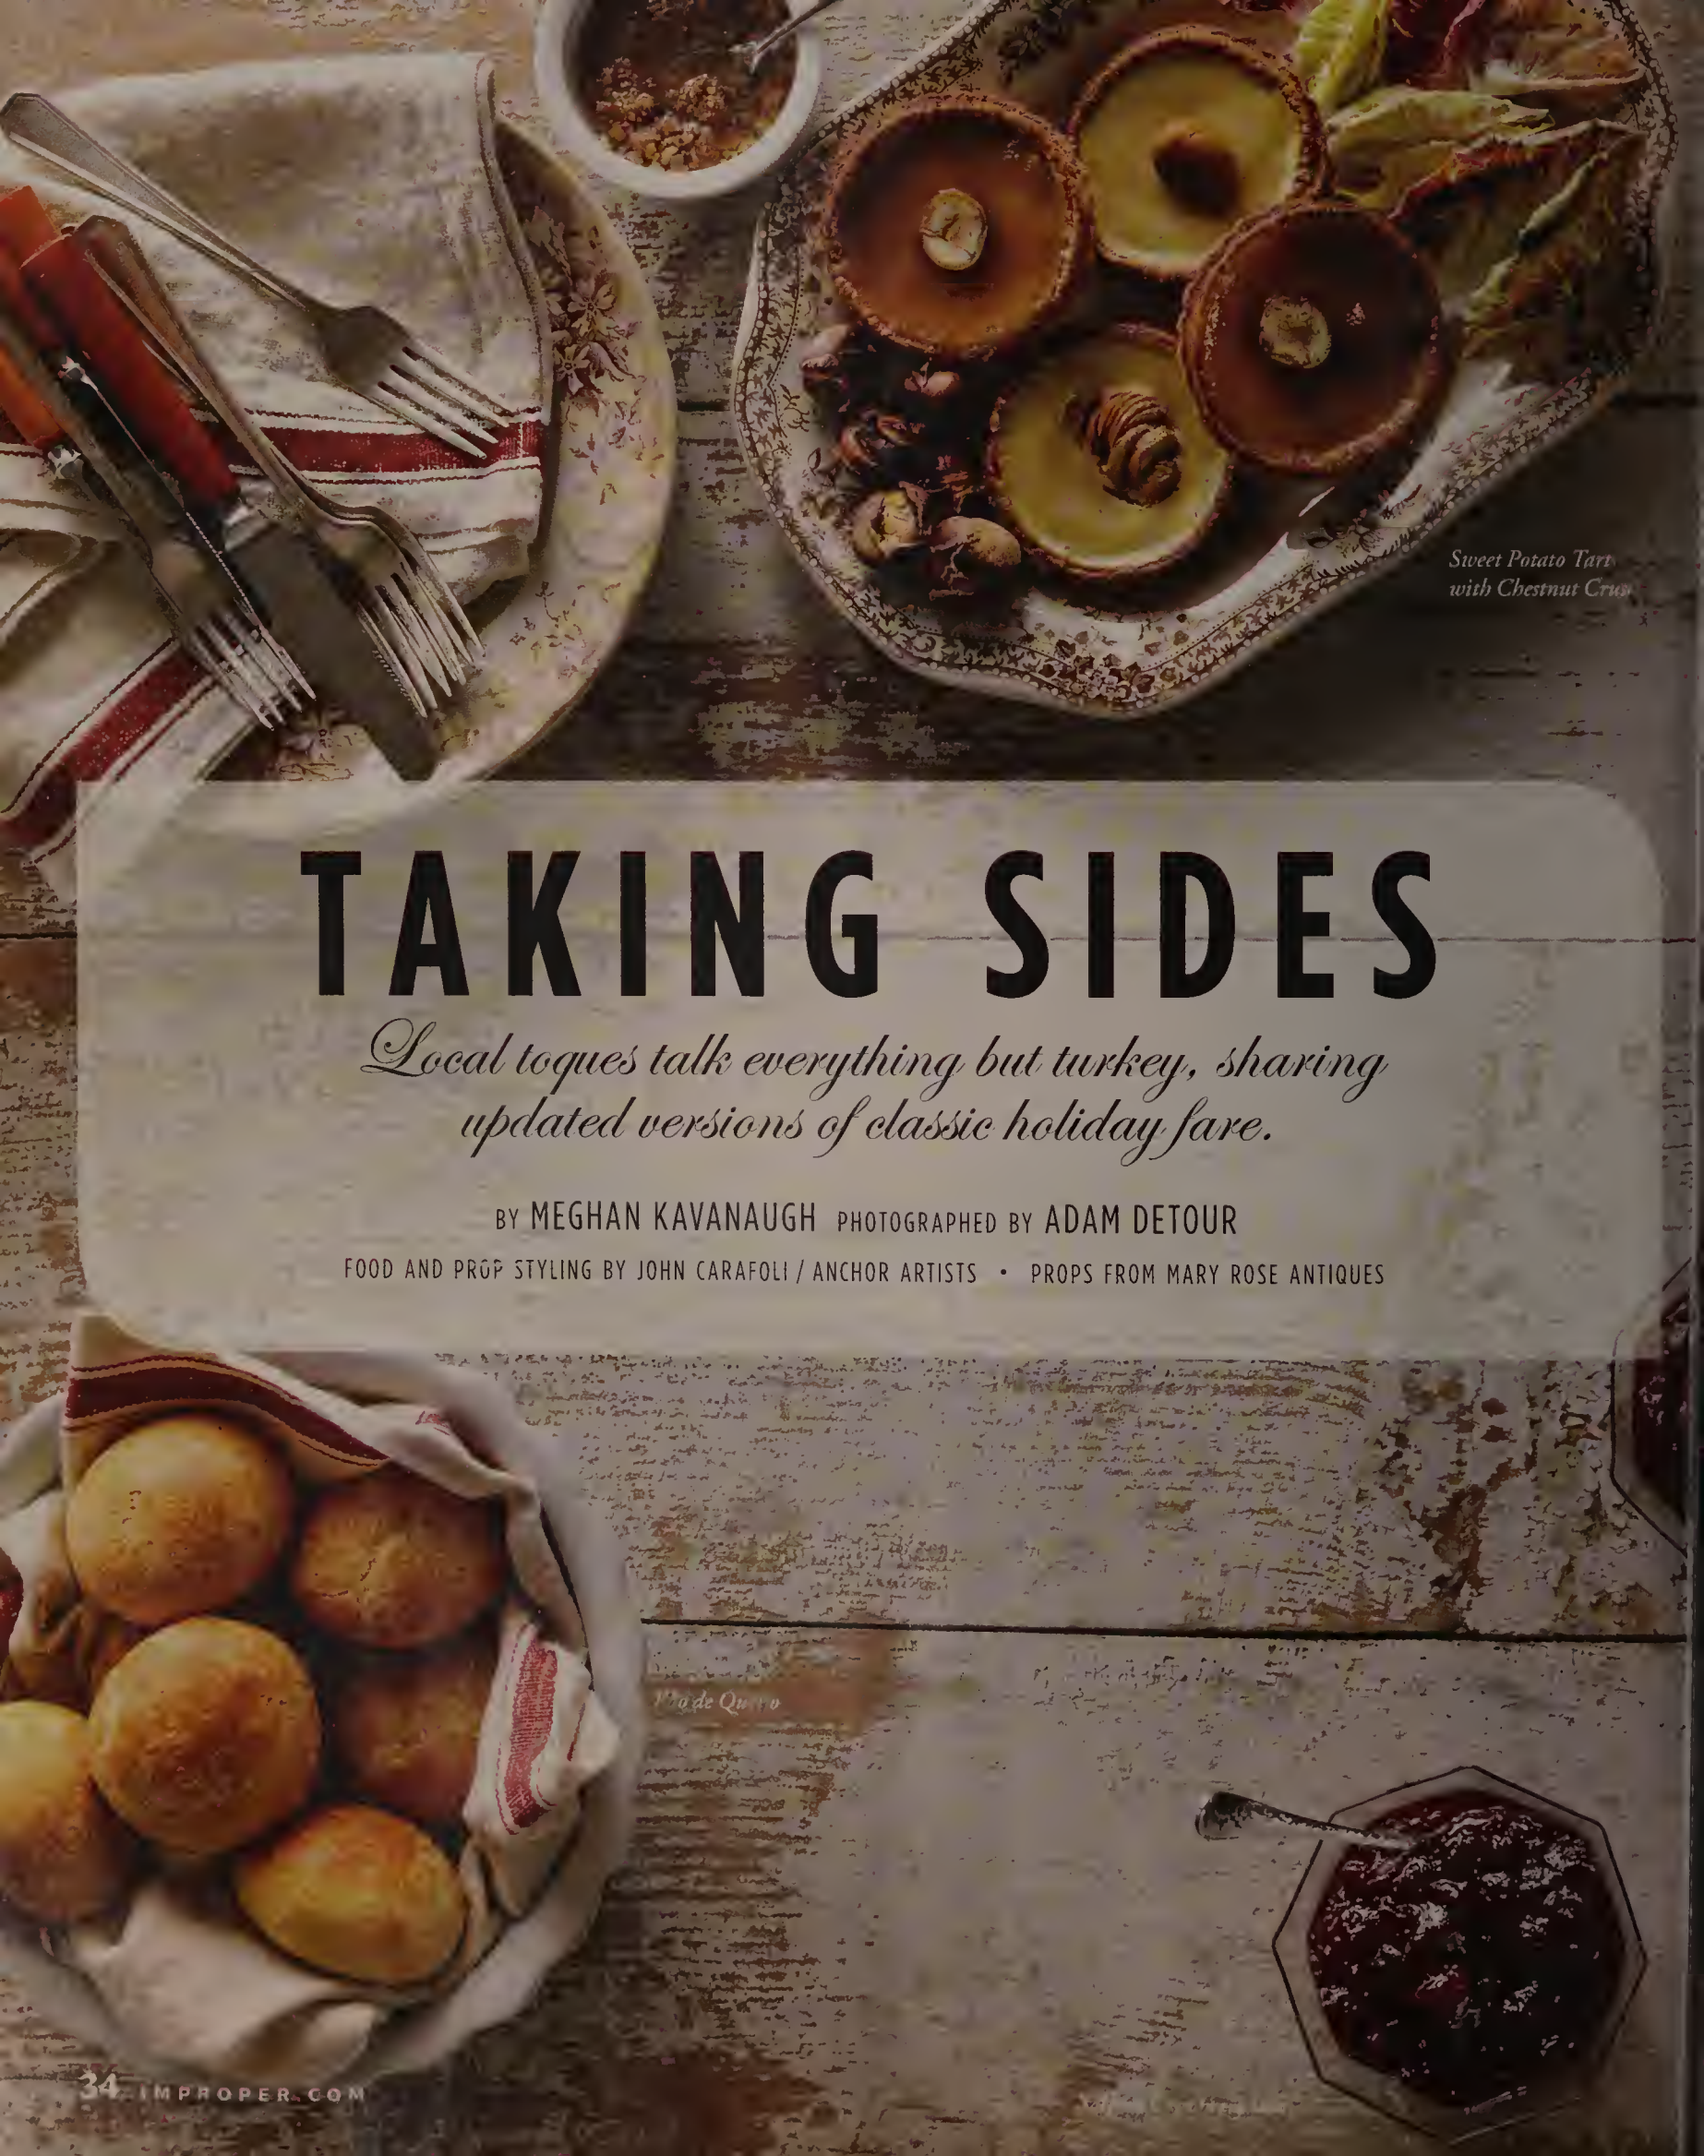
That was unfairly overlooked by the Academy. So name one working actor who's never appeared on Special Victims Unit. Wow! That's such a good question. There aren't many. I played Cassie Germaine, a cellist who was attacked. I worked so hard to learn how to fake playing the cello for this one scene, and in the end, the music wasn't even synched up. But I'm guessing David Boreanaz has not been on that show.

What is it about crime procedurals that fascinates people? There are a lot of factors. People love solving a mystery. They like coming up with the answers before the characters do, or wish they had. The science is interesting. It keeps your mind working. It scares you in a kind of controlled environment. And the sense of justice—seeing the good guys win.

Thing about you that's most like Temperance Brennan? I like the tangible. I don't like speaking in metaphors. I like literal things, empirical things, things you can touch. Facts. I don't do well with people who speak in metaphors or similes.

The way you're least like her? She's way smarter than I am. I'm a little more socially adept than she is, too.

Have you ever read or heard about a Jane Doe case where you were like "I can help with that. They need me." [Laughs.] Probably when we first started doing it I had thoughts like that, but no. I know how much I don't know, so I'm not that presumptuous. I do know of actors who do medical shows and actually think they can do an operation, but I don't have those delusions. That said, I'm always fascinated when they do find an unidentified body. There are many, many Jane and John Does out there that have yet to be solved, sadly.



Actor you most enjoyed working with? Betty White was on the show recently, and she's a hero of mine, so that was kind of awesome.

Director? That's a terrible thing to ask because I work with different directors all the time. But I'll say Anthony Minghella, who directed Cold Mountain. Not that my role was so big, but I will say that was an exceptional experience. He knew more about my character than I did, and I had months to think about it. It was a tiny, tiny part, and he had a whole backstory that was better than what I had. He's just amazing.

You're in your 11th season. Do you ever get sick of it, and how long do you see it going? Like any job, yes, of course, but I'm so lucky to have the job that I do. It's kind of a show that might never die. It's pretty perennial.

So here's to another 11 seasons. By then, they'll have our characters' children solving the crimes. ◆

SWEET POTATO TARTS WITH CHESTNUT CRUST

Jason Bond of Bondir

Knowing how tricky it can be to feed large groups during the holidays (especially when juggling food allergies on top of turkey roasting), Bondir chef/owner Jason Bond serves a gluten-free sweet potato tart with chestnut crust and pecan vinaigrette that can "accommodate a mixed crowd of eaters at a holiday table." Yielding two 9-inch or eight 3-inch tarts, the recipe is a riff on the versions at his Cambridge and Concord restaurants, where tarts filled with a variety of veggies are served as a first course or a vegetarian entree. And for the home cook, there's an added perk: The dough can be prepped early and stored in the freezer.

For the chestnut flour dough:

- 8 ounces unsalted butter, cubed
- 4½ ounces confectioner's sugar
- 4 ounces fresh chestnut paste (or any gluten-free flour)
- 2 eggs
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 12 ounces gluten-free flour

- In a large bowl, mix butter and sugar until pale. Combine chestnut paste and mix until fully incorporated. Add eggs one at a time. Slowly mix in salt and gluten-free flour.
- Whip on high for 1 minute and wrap in plastic to chill for one hour or overnight.

For the sweet potato filling:

- 4 sweet potatoes (about 2 pounds)
- Kosher salt and fresh black pepper to taste
- Freshly grated whole nutmeg to taste
- 3 eggs
- ½ cup heavy cream

- Heat the oven to 350 degrees. Bake the sweet potatoes for 1 hour or until tender. Scoop the flesh into a mixing bowl. Add a pinch of salt, a couple grinds of pepper and a couple scrapes of nutmeg. When it's warm, but not hot, stir in the eggs and cream, and whisk to combine. Taste and adjust the seasoning.
- Press the cold tart dough into a tart shell. Aim for a ⅛- to ¼-inch thickness.
- Bake the shell at 400 degrees for 15 minutes or until the tart shell begins to brown. Spoon in the sweet potato filling and bake for another 10-15 minutes until the filling is set, with a little jiggle to it.

For the pecan vinaigrette:

- 1 cup olive oil
- 2 shallots, minced
- 1 cup toasted pecans, chopped
- 2 tablespoons apple-cider vinegar (or wine vinegar)
- Salt and fresh black pepper to taste
- 1 tablespoon chives, minced

- In a small saucepan over medium heat, add olive oil and shallots and cook covered until shallots are soft and translucent.
- Add the pecans, vinegar, salt and pepper. Taste and adjust the seasoning.
- Finish with freshly chopped chives.

SAFFRON CRANBERRY JAM

Louis DiBiccari of Tavern Road

Politics isn't the only taboo topic at the holiday dinner table; cranberry sauce can be just as divisive. And while Team Canned may always prefer visible ridges, the from-scratch crowd may be able to tempt them with a twist on the classic recipe from Tavern Road chef/owner Louis DiBiccari. His saffron cranberry jam uses chili flakes, cinnamon and star anise to pack a serious flavor punch—and potentially change long-held opinions. "The use of bold ingredients to season the jam," he says, "really helps set it apart from classic sauces that can otherwise be fairly predictable."

- 6 bags fresh cranberries
- 3 cups sugar
- 1 cup red wine
- 1 tablespoon saffron
- 1 cup ginger, chopped
- 1 teaspoon dried chili
- 2 sticks lemongrass, smashed
- 4 cinnamon sticks
- 4 star anises
- 2 oranges, zested and juiced
- Salt to taste

- In a large stainless-steel pot, combine all ingredients, cover and cook over low heat. Remove cover to occasionally stir until cranberries break down to a jam consistency.
- Remove lemongrass, cinnamon and star anise. Add salt and more sugar to taste.

POTATO RÖSTI

Matt Jennings of Townsman

When Townsman chef/owner Matt Jennings was starting out in the kitchen, potato rösti was one of the first dishes he had to master: "I remember my chef telling me to throw it out and start over so many times!" Now he has the Swiss dish down pat, noting that the finished product should have a creamy interior and a crispy exterior, with nearly charred edges. And he's improved on the original with this 12-serving recipe, adding clotted cream and topping it with fresh truffle shavings and maple syrup. After all, he says, "Isn't everything better with maple and truffle?"

- 4 cups heavy cream
- 4 pounds russet potatoes, peeled
- 2 tablespoons olive oil, plus more as needed
- 2 onions, thinly sliced
- 1 tablespoon apple-cider vinegar
- 1 tablespoon kosher salt, plus more as needed
- Freshly ground black pepper
- Flaky sea salt
- Fresh truffle
- Maple syrup

- Heat the oven to 180 degrees. Pour the cream into a large oven-safe pot. Cover the pot and heat in the oven for 8-12 hours until the clotted cream—a thick, yellowish skin—forms. Let the pot cool at room temperature, and then refrigerate for 8 hours. Remove the clotted cream from the top of the pot. (The cream underneath can still be used for other purposes.) Set aside the clotted cream.

- In a large pot of boiling salted water, soften potatoes for 15-20 minutes or just until a paring knife slides into the center with some resistance. Drain, transfer to a rimmed baking sheet and chill uncovered for 30 minutes or until cold.

- Place racks in the highest and lowest positions in the oven, and heat it to 425 degrees. Line two 8-inch cake pans with parchment and brush with 2 tablespoons oil. In a large bowl, toss onions, vinegar and 1 tablespoon salt. Let sit 5-10 minutes or until onions are softened.

- Meanwhile, grate potatoes using a box grater or cut using a julienne slicer. Place prepared pans on the lower rack and heat for 5 minutes.

- In the large bowl, add potatoes to the onion mixture and toss to combine; season with salt and pepper. Divide the potato mixture between the hot pans and use a thin flexible spatula to press firmly until compact. Place on lower rack and bake 45-60 minutes or until potatoes are very brown around the edges. Remove rösti from the oven and let cool slightly.

- Heat broiler. Broil rösti on upper rack for 2-4 minutes or until the top is completely golden brown. Cut around sides with a small knife or offset spatula to loosen. Turn rösti onto a wire rack set inside a rimmed baking sheet. Carefully remove parchment paper (if potatoes stick, let them cool slightly). Brush top of rösti with more oil, sprinkle with sea salt and broil on upper rack for 2-4 minutes or until the second side is a deep golden brown.

- Dollop with clotted cream. Cover with shaved fresh truffle and maple syrup.

Tips: Clotted cream can be made in advance and stored in the refrigerator for up to four days. Potatoes can be softened one day ahead; once they're cold, cover. Rösti can be made 3 hours in advance; store uncovered at room temperature (or keep warm in a 250-degree oven for up to 1 hour). Reheat in a 300-degree oven for 10 minutes before serving.

CORNBREAD STUFFING WITH CHINESE SAUSAGE, SHIITAKE MUSHROOMS AND CARAMELIZED FENNEL

Asia Mei of Moonshine 152

When it comes to holiday feasting, Moonshine 152 chef/owner Asia Mei doesn't waste any time with dry turkey. "All I ever really care about is stuffing, sides and gravy," she says, sharing a recipe for the first with a layered and satisfying flavor profile. The cornbread brings the sweet, the shiitake mushrooms provide an earthiness and the Chinese sausage carries a salty-fatty-umami combo. "All of these slightly different takes on what would otherwise be a plain sausage-mushroom bake come together to make a more memorable, completely approachable Asian-influenced item."

- ¼ pound butter
- 3 large shallots, diced
- 1 tablespoon fennel seeds
- 1 teaspoon chili flakes
- 1 tablespoon thyme, chopped
- 1 tablespoon rosemary, chopped
- 2 tablespoons fresh sage chiffonade
- 2 tablespoons garlic, chopped
- 1 cup Chinese sausage, diced
- 1 quart shiitake mushroom caps, trimmed and sliced
- 1 quart fennel, sliced
- ½ cup white wine or sherry
- 3 quarts day-old cornbread, cubed
- 2 cups chicken stock
- Salt and pepper to taste

- Melt the butter in a large pot over low heat. Combine the shallots, fennel seeds, chili flakes, thyme, rosemary and sage. Stir until the shallots are translucent. Add the garlic and a couple pinches of salt. Continue to mix until the garlic gets slightly toasted.

- Add the sausage, shiitake mushrooms and fennel to the pot, and raise to medium heat, stirring occasionally until the fennel and mushrooms are cooked through, with the fennel developing a caramelized color. Add the wine to deglaze the pot, and reduce the liquid until it is almost dry.

- Mix the cornbread, chicken stock and salt and pepper to taste. Combine everything to evenly coat the cubes of bread with vegetables, sausage and herbs. (Additional stock or extra butter may be needed to saturate the cornbread pieces.)

- Serve straight out of the pot. To reheat later in the day, spread the stuffing evenly into a pan and heat at 350 degrees for 20 minutes or until the top is toasted.

MOLE-SPICED ROASTED VEGETABLES

Carolyn Johnson of 80 Thoreau

"Turkey and mole is a very traditional combo in Mexico," says chef Carolyn Johnson of Concord eatery 80 Thoreau. Here, she extracts the sauce's signature spices to enhance "the orange holiday veggies," namely winter squashes and sweet potatoes. "The spice mix uses a lot of ingredients, but they all harmonize together to make a very rich and flavorful coating for the roasted vegetables," she says, noting that you can adjust the amount of ancho chili seeds to control the heat. The spice mix recipe should yield more than enough for one batch, so Johnson recommends getting creative with leftovers—try seasoning different veggies or rubbing it on roast chicken or turkey for an extra kick.

For the spice mix:

- ¼ cup coriander seeds
- 1 cinnamon stick
- 2 cloves
- 4 dried ancho chilies
- 1 cup toasted almonds
- 1 cup toasted pepitas
- ¼ cup cocoa nibs
- ½ teaspoon cayenne
- 2 tablespoons masa harina

- Toast the coriander seeds, cinnamon and cloves in a small saute pan over medium heat. Cook 1-2 minutes or until the spices become fragrant. Set aside to cool.

- In the same pan, dry toast the ancho chilies until they puff a bit and become fragrant. When cool, remove the stems. Remove seeds, if desired. Gently crush the chilies to break them up into smaller pieces.

- Coarsely grind the coriander in a spice grinder.

- Break the cinnamon stick into a few pieces and grind with the cloves into a fine powder.

- Combine all the ingredients in a food processor and mix until they are a consistent size and all of the ingredients have incorporated together. (Be careful not to overmix into a paste.)

For the vegetables:

- 2 sweet potatoes
- 1 acorn squash
- 1 delicata squash
- ¼ cup extra-virgin olive oil
- 4 cloves garlic
- Salt and pepper to taste

- Heat the oven to 400 degrees.

- Wash the vegetables. Peel the sweet potatoes and cut into half-moon shapes ¼-inch thick. Halve the squashes and scoop the seeds out. Cut into slices ½-inch thick.

- Toss the veggies in a bowl with the oil, garlic, salt, pepper and ½ cup of the spice mix.

- Spread in a single layer on a rimmed baking sheet. Bake for 15-20 minutes or until the vegetables are tender and golden.

ROASTED BRUSSELS SPROUTS WITH BLISTERED SHISHITOS AND BLACK GARLIC DRESSING

Lucas Sousa of Beacon Hill Hotel & Bistro

"Everyone loves roasted Brussels sprouts; there is nothing to dispute there," says executive chef Lucas Sousa of Beacon Hill Hotel & Bistro. But even die-hard fans may want to dig into something a little different every once in a while. That's where black garlic—one of Sousa's favorite ingredients—comes in. "It is usually always somewhere in my kitchen," he says, adding that black garlic can be found at any local Whole Foods. Couple it with fellow Asian culinary staple shishito peppers, and "it definitely switches things up a bit."

For the black garlic dressing:

- 8 pieces black garlic
- ¼ cup Parmesan cheese, grated
- 2 tablespoons lemon juice
- 1 egg yolk
- ¼ cup water
- 1 ½ cups neutral oil
- Salt and black pepper to taste

- Blend garlic, cheese, lemon juice, egg yolk and water. Slowly add oil until thick, and season with salt and black pepper.

For the vegetables:

- 2 cups whole shishito peppers
- Neutral oil
- Salt and black pepper to taste
- 4 cups Brussels sprouts, halved

- Heat the oven to 400 degrees. On the stove, warm a cast-iron skillet over medium-high heat.
- In a bowl, combine the peppers with a small amount of oil. Coat the peppers with salt and black pepper.
- Add the peppers to the skillet, leaving any excess oil in the bowl. Cook for 2 minutes or until the peppers are charred, stirring occasionally. Take the peppers out of the skillet and set aside.
- Return the skillet to medium-high heat and add enough oil to coat the bottom of the skillet. Place the Brussels sprouts cut-side down in the skillet. Once the edges begin to change color, place the skillet into the oven for 5 minutes or until the Brussels sprouts are tender.
- Remove the skillet from the oven and add the peppers back into the skillet. Toss with ¼ cup of black garlic dressing to lightly coat. Serve warm.

PÃO DE QUEIJO

Tse Wei Lim and Diana Kudayarova of Ames Street Deli

They may appear on the breakfast menu at Cambridge's Ames Street Deli, but the pão de queijo buns from co-owners Tse Wei Lim and Diana Kudayarova are a welcome addition to the dinner table. "They're savory and chewy and squishy and distinctly crusty, every one a little boule of textural delight," Lim says of the cheesy Brazilian street food. But don't think you need to wait for a special occasion to break this bread. "More innately flavorful than the traditional biscuits or dinner rolls," he says, "pão de queijo are perfect either for mopping the plate or munching contemplatively during a quiet post-prandial afternoon."

- 1 cup milk
- ½ cup plus 1 tablespoon vegetable oil
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 2 ½ cups tapioca starch
- 5 ½ ounces sharp cheddar, grated
- 1 teaspoon mustard powder mixed with 1 teaspoon of water
- 3 eggs

- Combine milk, oil and salt in a pot and bring to a boil. Add in tapioca and stir vigorously with a wooden spoon, on heat, until the starch is cooked, showing translucency and pulling away from the bottom of the pot in stretchy strands.
- Transfer the dough into a stand mixer fitted with a paddle attachment. Paddle it for a few seconds to release some steam. Add the cheddar and the mustard powder mix and paddle until integrated. Add the eggs and continue to paddle at medium speed until the batter becomes smooth and sticky. Store covered in the refrigerator until the batter is cold.
- Heat the oven to 450 degrees. Use a spoon to portion and shape the dough into balls with wet hands. Bake for 15 minutes or until browned.

HOME for the HOLIDAYS

A blogger, a florist, a stylist and an event planner serve up DIY tips for entertaining your guests—and yourself.

BY SARAH HAGMAN · PHOTOGRAPHED BY HOLLY RIKE

SET A TEMPTING TABLE

- For a fun alternative to place cards, shape the first initial of each guest's name in a sturdy but pliable wire; then use a thinner one to secure greenery, flowers and berries. "There's no wrong way to do it," says Emily Starr Alfano of Natick's mStarr Event Design. "It's a nice personalization for everybody and adds something to the place setting."

- Aim for balance. Bright plates and vessels offset dark candles; draped napkins soften an industrial space.

- Get creative with household items. Starr Alfano used a cutting board to give the centerpiece a boost.

- Different shades of purple add depth to the floral arrangements. Not an artful arranger? Starr Alfano suggests filling a few bowls with berries for easy and colorful centerpieces.

- "I need whimsy in everything I do," says Starr Alfano, pointing out the two differently colored goblets, which don't quite match but are still similar, adding to the playful vibe.

- A tablescape can have a lot of elements without feeling cluttered. Play around until you find the right mix; remember to keep place settings compact so guests have enough elbow room during the meal.

WARM THE HEARTH

- "A scroll adds a fun, festive moment," notes Laura Jean Pecci of Cambridge's Laura Jean Floral and Event Design, whose merry mantel is adorned with an excerpt from "The Night Before Christmas."

- Gather bulky, long-lasting greens such as cedar, camellia branch or pine in bunches to string together in a garland. Pecci's cost-efficient tip: Opt for something asymmetrical. "Play with the style so that you're not making 12 feet—you can get away with five." Here, her garland is actually only on the right side.

- How to get the rest of the greenery? "Reutilize plants from your patio and outdoors," Pecci suggests. Succulents and air plants add lots of volume to the design without dipping into your wallet.

- Those white orchid blossoms aren't really on the branch. Place flowers that can last out of water—or even bloomed plant bulbs—throughout the setup.

- Incorporate pears and figs for pops of color. You can switch in pomegranates or oranges for different occasions.

- Repurposing objects opens up lots of possibilities. Those candleholders are actually dessert coupes.

GREET THE GUESTS

- "Create a mini arrival experience" with a festive entryway, says Kathryn Yee of Fort Point's Bash Studio. Consider welcoming guests with a playful statement, like this linen banner hung from a copper pipe Yee bought at a hardware store.

- Offer your guests something to sip on stat. Yee dressed up her drinks with nametags, herbs and straws fastened with thread. You can even make an icebreaker out of it. "During the holidays, you're bringing together people from all facets of your life," Yee says. "Encourage guests to mix and mingle by choosing a personality or character."

- Play with different textures. For this spread, Yee combined wood, copper, eucalyptus and other materials for a multi-dimensional look.

- Yee suggests draping greenery on a ledge for the look of garland without all the labor.

- For a sweet departure, leave a to-go treat, like extra dark chocolate caramel popcorn from Arlington confectionery Ava's.

RAISE THE BAR

- Local blogger Kate Bowler of Domestikated Life recommends DIY cocktails for larger groups. "You can set up stuff in the kitchen; guests can come in and pour themselves a drink," says Bowler, who displayed instructions for a simple Champagne cocktail on an easel in this cheery bar setup.

- Tight on space in your apartment? "Doing something like a seasonal arrangement or focal point on your wall that adds some Christmas colors, textures and scents is a nice way to get around having a traditional tree in your home," Bowler says.

- "The pompom tinsel garland adds a dash of kitsch and humor," Bowler adds. "It's the holidays; it shouldn't be serious." Make your own by tying two 4-inch pieces of tinsel garland in a knot and stringing several knots together on fishing wire.

- Odd numbers are your friend when decorating. Five wreaths make for an organic, unfussy focal point; three main colors keep the look cohesive. Varying heights likewise help create a dynamic vibe, pulled off with props like plates, cake stands and Champagne buckets.

A STICKY SITUATION The 1958 cult classic The Blob may be a work of science fiction, but a similar situation was very real for Bostonians some 40 years before the film was released, when two million gallons of molasses sloooowly decimated the North End and killed 21 people. That's why the latest installment of Science on Screen is bringing journalist Ferris Jabr to the Coolidge Corner Theatre, where he'll give a talk on the science behind the Great Molasses Flood before a screening that'll have Steve McQueen battling the gelatinous alien creature once more. Take a deep breath before The Blob engulfs the Coolidge on Dec. 7. / Ariana Colozzo

Reviews by Brett Michel

Bridge of Spies ★★★ A handsome dramatization of real events that took place during the late '50s and early '60s, Steven Spielberg's latest finds him returning to the talents of one of his (and America's) favorite leading men, Tom Hanks. For their fourth collaboration, Hanks slips comfortably back into Jimmy Stewart's old shoes as modern cinema's everyman. He's Cold War hero James B. Donovan, who's tapped as the defense attorney for accused spy Rudolf Ivanovich Abel (Mark Rylance), a British-born Soviet arrested in Brooklyn during the film's masterful, wordless prologue. "Everyone will hate me," says Donovan, who realizes what will happen to his reputation when he defends one of the most hated men in the country, "but at least I'll lose." Much of the understated humor—from the snappy patter to the enjoyably eccentric characters Donovan encounters once he's recruited by the CIA to arrange a spy exchange that drives the second half—comes from a script credited to the Coen brothers and Matt Charman. Still, it's Spielberg's earnestness and faith in our democracy that shows through. It may be set during the height of the Cold War, but the movie's subtext is progressively modern; freedom isn't truly free if you value national security and state secrets over our Constitution. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Brooklyn ★★★1/2 This disarming romantic drama from director John Crowley (Boy A) benefits just as much from a starmaking performance by Saoirse Ronan (The Lovely Bones) as it does from a script by novelist Nick Hornby, who's built a solid second career adapting other people's works of fiction into films. In this case, Hornby has condensed Colm Tóibín's Brooklyn, a bestseller about a young Irish immigrant who leaves her small town when an Irish priest in Brooklyn offers to sponsor a move to America, which promises a better future in the hard years after World War II. Eilis Lacey (Ronan) doesn't want to leave her mother and sister behind, but job prospects are slim, so she boards a boat and settles into a job at a Brooklyn department store. Her profound homesickness is eased when she meets Tony (The Place Beyond the Pines' Emory Cohen), an Italian-American plumber who falls hard for her, even if she's not a Dodgers fan. But Eilis' new life is threatened when her sponsoring priest (Jim Broadbent) arrives with devastating news from home. Hornby compresses a bit too much into the third act, but Ronan eases any missteps with her luminous presence. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Burnt ★★ At first glance, this comedic drama directed by John Wells (August: Osage County) would appear to be a big-screen update of Fox's short-lived Kitchen Confidential. The 2005 TV series based on Anthony Bourdain's book starred pre-fame cooking enthusiast Bradley Cooper as a bad-boy chef. But even though this movie reunites Cooper with Sienna Miller, his costar from the massively popular American Sniper, it might not have made it past the pilot stage if it had been made for TV. Cooper plays Adam Jones, one-time enfant terrible of the Paris food scene, a two-star Michelin chef who lost everything when his taste for booze, drugs and women eclipsed his godlike palate. Drying out in Louisiana during a year spent shucking a million oysters, he dreamed of returning to London, determined to earn that elusive third star and join the ranks of the greats. If only he weren't such an unlikable prick. Ah, but the script, written by Steven Knight (Locke) and based on a story by Michael Kalesniko (Bourdain wasn't consulted; Mario Batali was), makes Jones a hero that everyone eventually worships, even if he has more issues than Sniper's Chris Kyle. At least his food looks tasty. (At Assembly Row, Fenway, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Hunger Games: Mockingjay – Part 2 ★★1/2 The Hunger Games conclude with a whimper as Jennifer Lawrence's Katniss Everdeen, the reluctant leader of the rebellion against the Capitol and its dastardly leader President Snow (Donald Sutherland), regains her voice after being brutally choked by Peeta Mellark (Josh Hutcherson) at the end of Mockingjay – Part 1. She still loves him though, and she kinda loves Gale Hawthorne too, I guess, but there's so little heat in this triangle that it feels tragically square. Made by music-video veteran Francis Lawrence, who's directed all but the first film in this series based on Suzanne Collins' trilogy of young adult novels, this final installment brings back Effie Trinket (Elizabeth Banks), Caesar Flickerman (Stanley Tucci), Haymitch Abernathy (Woody Harrelson) and Plutarch Heavensbee (the late Philip Seymour Hoffman, in his final, incomplete performance). I admit to being amazed that most of these talents signed on for this nonsense. (Gotta pay the bills somehow!) Still, these films are marginally better than their Twilight counterparts. In short, Hunger Games fans will likely be satisfied with this final meal, while the rest of us will feel pretty famished. Pass the popcorn! (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Martian ★★★★ Raise your hand if you've heard this one before: Matt Damon plays an astronaut who's stranded alone on an inhospitable planet, and he's willing to do just about anything to get back home to Earth. OK, put your hand down, because The Martian isn't Interstellar. It's better. In Ridley Scott's realistically science-minded triumph, the charming actor plays Mark Watney, who's abandoned and left for dead during a mission on Mars. A splendid adaptation of Andy Weir's speculative-fiction novel, this 3-D marvel focuses on Mark's efforts to stay alive. It will take four years for a rescue mission to reach him, and even with rationing, his food supply will only last a year. "Luckily, I'm a botanist," Mark says during one of his many video log entries, a device that allows the innately likable Damon to address the audience directly through much of the film; we believe in Mark as he concludes, "I'm gonna have to science the shit out of this." Does he ever. But rather than play things for suspense, as Alfonso Cuarón did in 2013's Gravity, the 77-year-old Scott presents his picture as a paean to the enduring spirit of man's ingenuity against overwhelming odds. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Peanuts Movie ★★1/2 The late Charles M. Schulz's beloved comic strip is brought into the digital age in the Peanuts gang's big-screen, 3-D, computer-animated debut, directed by Steve Martino (Ice Age: Continental Drift). All of your favorites are here, from Charlie Brown to his faithful dog Snoopy, as are tropes from the countless animated TV specials that were produced from 1965 onward. Snoopy is still battling imaginary nemesis the Red Baron, Lucy is still doling out five-cent psychiatric advice and Charlie still pines for the Little Red-Haired Girl. Fact is, the film's biggest flaw is overfamiliarity. The Schulz estate would only allow this movie to be made if it fit the spirit of the existing property. Hence, it's been produced by Charles' son Craig and grandson Bryan, who also wrote the script along with Cornelius Uliano; the three have packed in so many callbacks that you very quickly come to miss the iconic jazz music Vince Guaraldi composed for 18 Peanuts TV specials, which has been mostly replaced with Christophe Beck's modern, sentimental sludge. Not to mention, there's just something off about the gang's digital hair (Linus' follicles will haunt my dreams). Your kids may love this new take, but it sure ain't Pixar. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Room ★★★★ The first voice we hear in director Lenny Abrahamson's filmed version of Emma Donoghue's novel is that of 5-year-old Jack (Jacob Tremblay), who opens with the words "Once upon a time..." But this is no fairy tale; it's a prolonged nightmare, one that began seven years earlier for Jack's "Ma" (Brie Larson). Nevertheless, she's successfully raised a wonderful child in the most horrific of situations—the two inhabit a windowless, electronically locked backyard shack, a tiny 10-by-10-foot prison. Ma is sexually abused nightly by their captor, a man known as Old Nick (Sean Bridgers), as Jack lays tucked away inside a small wardrobe. In such dire circumstances, Ma hasn't let Jack know there's life beyond the walls of "Room." But as Jack rereads Alice's Adventures in Wonderland, Ma decides to end the charade, telling her uncomprehending boy about the larger world as she formulates a plan to free them. If she's successful, Jack will enter a rabbit hole that exits into reality, like an inverse of Alice's Wonderland. Joan Allen delivers some fine work in the latter part of the picture, but it's the believable bond between the two leads and their wholly naturalistic, award-worthy performances that elevate the film into greatness. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Spectre ★ The problem with Daniel Craig's James Bond is that his first outing as the British super-spy, 2006's Casino Royale, was just too damn good. It reinvented the secret agent with the license to kill as an aggressive bulldog, downplaying the more suave aspects of the character while adding parkour, brutal hand-to-hand combat and an energy that was clearly a direct response to the Jason Bourne series. This was a new Bond, a guy you'd want to have a beer with, never mind a martini. Sadly, in the three films since, Bond's producers have bent over backward trying to return him to the man he was, straining to connect all of Craig's adventures into one big, ridiculously convoluted narrative, serializing his stories like an ongoing cable TV drama while making Bond progressively dour. Craig clearly isn't having much fun in this latest outing, and I don't blame him, since returning director Sam Mendes, hot off of 2012's Skyfall—the most successful Bond film ever, financially if not creatively—is determined to also make the longest Bond picture. On this count, he's succeeded. It's no wonder Craig looks bored; I was checking my watch too, since the 148-minute running time feels infinitely longer. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Spotlight ★★★★ Tom McCarthy's taut, superb drama illuminates the people who make the fading institution of print journalism great. In 2003, The Boston Globe's Spotlight Team won a Pulitzer Prize for its comprehensive coverage of the Roman Catholic Church's sexual-abuse scandal, a painful situation all too familiar to Bostonians who followed the four-person unit's exhaustive yearlong reporting. McCarthy focuses on the compelling story behind the stories, shining a spotlight on the work done by Globe editor Walter "Robby" Robinson (Michael Keaton) and his team—Mike Rezendes (Mark Ruffalo), Sacha Pfeiffer (Rachel McAdams) and Matt Carroll (Brian d'Arcy James)—making what might just be the best film about investigative journalism since Alan J. Pakula's 1976 Oscar winner All the President's Men. Self-described outsider Marty Baron (Liev Schreiber), The Globe's quiet new editor, makes the Spotlight Team's story a priority on his first day on the job, prompting a common refrain he's met with throughout the film: "You want to sue the Church?!" After all, the paper has a lot to lose, since 53 percent of their readership is Catholic. In the end, not even The Globe itself is free from criticism, demonstrating a key quality that McCarthy shares with his subject: integrity. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Steve Jobs ★★★1/2 Screenwriter Aaron Sorkin loosely adapts Walter Isaacson's biography Steve Jobs into what's essentially a three-act play—a very cinematic one, captured on film (16mm and 35mm) and digital by Danny Boyle, Oscar-winning director of Slumdog Millionaire. Each format records the backstage moments before a product launch—the Macintosh in 1984, the NeXT Computer in 1988 and the iMac in 1998. Sorkin being Sorkin, he takes many dramatic liberties, crafting a tale populated by the ghosts of product launches past, present and future, represented by programmers Steve "Woz" Wozniak (Seth Rogen) and Andy Hertzfeld (Michael Stuhlbarg), former Apple CEO John Sculley (Jeff Daniels, a veteran of Sorkin's Newsroom) and Jobs' oft-rejected daughter Lisa (Makenzie Moss, Ripley Sobo and Perla Haney-Jardine). Nevertheless, the movie's fanciful fiction distills a real truth about who Jobs was—warts and all. A lot of that credit also goes to Michael Fassbender; the actor may not physically resemble Jobs, but he embodies the man's vision. "I play the orchestra," Jobs says, describing what he does to Joanna Hoffman (Kate Winslet), his long-suffering "work wife." Ultimately, he's less of a husband than a father, the main role with which Sorkin defines him. (At Assembly Row, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

TRUMBO ★★★ Director Jay Roach may be best known for the broad comedy of his Austin Powers and Meet the Parents/Fockers feature films, but his latest is closer in tone and spirit to his HBO historical drama, Recount, which chronicled the turmoil in Florida immediately after the 2000 presidential election. No less political, Trumbo is another true-life tale, this one beginning in 1947, a biographical portrait of the top screenwriter of the time. As detailed in John McNamara's script (based on the book by Bruce Cook), Dalton Trumbo (a fine Bryan Cranston) enjoyed writing in his bathtub, while soaking in both water and an ever-present glass of Scotch. Alas, Trumbo and colleagues like Arlen Hird (Louis C.K.) became targets of a witch hunt led by a House subcommittee and fueled by gossip columnists like Hedda Hopper (Helen Mirren), who branded him a "swimming pool Soviet" for belonging to the Communist Party. Jailed for his political beliefs, Trumbo would nevertheless go on to win two Academy Awards—without receiving credit, since he'd been blacklisted, unable to use his own name. But he never stopped fighting, standing up to "patriots" like John Wayne (David James Elliott) as he battled the absurdity of this injustice. MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

BOTTOMS ON TOP The Front Bottoms never grew out of their teenage punk phase—and that's a good thing. Vocalist and guitarist Brian Sella and drummer Mat Uychich wrote their first tunes together in the sixth grade, and their indie-punk outfit has gone from covering Modest Mouse at their high school talent show to raucous sets at Riot Fest and, now, a sold-out tour in support of their third studio album, Back on Top. The steadily on-the-rise quartet signed with Panic! At The Disco's label Fueled by Ramen for their junior effort, which is marked by catchy choruses and twangy folk guitar. It's bottoms up with the Jersey rockers on Nov. 29 at Royale. / Erin Rand

ART WITH HEART If you've got art lovers on your nice list, you're in luck—'tis the season for holiday art sales. First up, from Nov. 28 through Dec. 5, is Barbara Krakow Gallery's annual AIDS Benefit Exhibition, where small works are available for $350 each, all of which goes to your choice of two worthy causes: The Boston Pediatric AIDS Project and the African AIDS Initiative International. Next is the MassArt Made Holiday Sale, which takes over the school's Tower Building lobby Dec. 6-12 so you can score oil paintings, hand-blown glassware, funky jewelry and other gifts created by alumni and current students (like ceramics major Michelle Grey, whose work is pictured here). And last-minute shoppers, take heart: Rick Fleury's seascapes, Joan Clark's still-lifes and other pint-sized pieces by member artists are on offer in Co|So Artists' Holiday Small Works 2015 at the Copley Society of Art through Dec. 24. | Jacqueline Houton

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 Tremont Street, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

Beer Specialty

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Something's always brewing at Best of Boston's award winning beer bar. 70 IS THE NEW TODDLER

The fashionistas and hedge fund hotties were out in full force for Unmask Cancer, a fundraiser for Dana-Farber and The Jimmy Fund presented by the Mandarin Oriental and held at the Seaport hotspot District Hall. For any guest who neglected to wear a mask, there was a face painter of exceptional talent, and for anyone who enjoys automotive porn, there was the latest tricked-out Maserati parked out front.

Inside were Hollywood homegirl Eliza Dushku (looking spectacular in a flowy dress and feathered mask), her bestie, Newbury Street threads peddler Harley Bilzerian with her parents, Alan and Be, the sickeningly gorgeous Tracy Alumbaugh, Fox 25 meteorologist Sarah Wroblewski with her other half, Bobby Lyons, and co-chairs Marissa and Scott Carmel, along with equally sparkling others.

A performance oddly reminiscent of Mummenschanz was followed by dancing into the wee hours, and by midnight none of the 260 attendees seemed to be feeling any pain. They did manage to raise north of $200,000, though, which is nothing to sneeze at.

The evening's funniest remark: "I'll be 70 soon, and it really doesn't bother me, as long as I know there'll be somebody there to sponge up the drool."

FUND. JOEY FUND.

The Joey O'Donnell Film Premiere is always an excellent time, but when there's a new Bond movie coming out, it's especially exciting. The Joey Fund's 31st annual gala, which features dinner and drinks followed by the premiere of a blockbuster, gave guests the bragging rights of seeing the new 007 flick, Spectre, before anyone but the critics.

The evening began in the Neiman Marcus court at the Natick Mall with free-flowing bubbly and booze, plus food from restaurants such as Alta Strada, Grill 23, Kowloon and Trade.

Spotted grazing among the gliterrati: the event's founder, concessions king Joe O'Donnell and his flawless wife, Kathy, hospitality magnate Patrick Lyons with the magical Kristina and the alarmingly fast-growing Wyatt, Babson College president Kerry Healey (looking smashing in lilac with a dazzling vintage amethyst necklace), Playbill publisher Tim Montgomery and the lovely Rita Fucillo, theatrical impresarios Bill Hanney and Karen Nascembeni, the uber-lovable Linda Matzkin and her legal eagle husband, Joe, tech guru Bob Davis, laugh riot Kate Lubin and her other half, Glendon Sutton, at least one of the Phantom Gourmet Andelmans, and a man who was mistaken for someone else and said, "I never mind getting confused for someone younger, taller and better looking than me."

Guests were shuttled to the AMC theater for the show, where they were treated to complimentary movie snacks, and the evening raised more than a million dollars to battle cystic fibrosis. Not bad for dinner and a movie.

BREAST MEN

Massachusetts is a leader in a lot of things, but unfortunately, one of them is that it has the second highest incidence of breast cancer in the country. That's why yours truly joined Susan G. Komen Massachusetts for its inaugural Pink Tie Guys fundraiser, held at the super-swanky Algonquin Club in Back Bay.

Gathered in the library overlooking Comm. Ave. were the auspicious likes of Lexus kingpin Vinny Liuzzi, the unsinkable Tracy Curley and her husband, Brad, interim CEO Lori van Dam, lovable publicist Adam Klein, the evening's answers to Vanna White—Lindsay McGloughlin, Theresa Keresztes and Angela Diaz—board chair Christine George, development cutie Catie Fauvelle and one pair of gentlemen who were probably the first in the club's 130-year history to earnestly discuss the legalization of marijuana within its hand-tooled leather walls.

Meanwhile, one of the items in the silent auction included tickets to the Aquarium, F-1 racing, a whale watch and laser tag, which one guest described as "the perfect first date for a couple with severe ADD." But the funniest remark came from the man who saw the tickets to an Air Supply concert at Twin River Casino and said, "How much can I pay not to win that?" ◆

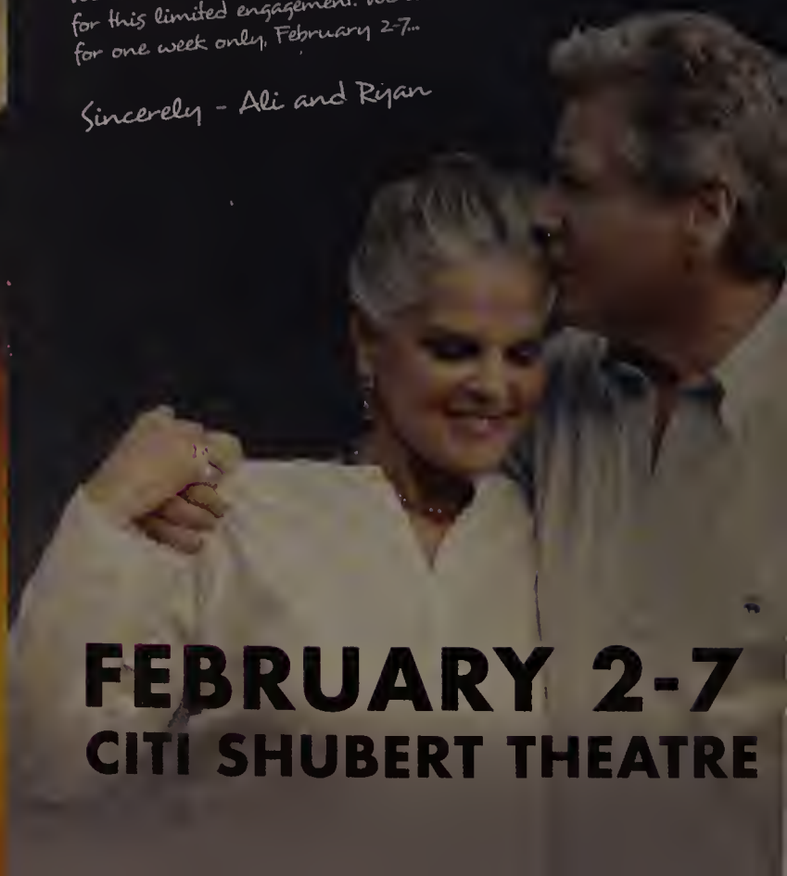
LOVE LETTERS

BY A.R. GURNEY DIRECTED BY GREGORY MOSHER



"A SUPERLATIVE NEW BROADWAY PRODUCTION."
– Entertainment Weekly

Have you heard our exciting news?

For anyone who relates to romance and remembers "Love Story" we're reuniting after 40 years to bring you LOVE LETTERS by A.R. Gurney, directed by our great friend Gregory Mosher. Love Letters is a beautifully written piece that tracks the lives and deep connection of two people who have known each other over a lifetime. The letters they have written to each other describe their own lives and emotions with every imaginable mood. Their relationship over the many, many years is one to which audiences will no doubt personally relate to.

We can't wait to share the stage, and we hope you will join us for this limited engagement. We will be at the Shubert Theatre for one week only, February 2-7...

Sincerely - Ali and Ryan

'TIS THE SEASON

CHRISTMAS MORNING CAME early to the Improper office, which looked almost unrecognizable a few weeks ago: Bags and boxes commandeered the conference table and overflowed from the front desk to the lobby floor. The elves responsible for that impressive haul? Nicole Popma and Alayna Eberhart, who teamed up to curate our gift guide, scouring independently owned local stores for something for everyone on your shopping list, from the DIY devotee to the cocktail connoisseur to the outdoorsy adventurer. And there are lots more fun finds in our Holiday Shopping issue. Lydia Santangelo serves up a fierce fashion spread of menswear-inspired styles, playing with the idea of a boys' club with a shoot at Yvonne's, the new hotspot in the former home of Locke-Ober, whose dining room was famously men-only until 1970. Elsewhere, Sarah Hagman stops in a new pop-up shop with a French accent, while Meghan Kavanaugh checks in with a store that's putting homely but wholesome veggies and other surplus foodstuffs to good use. And Jonathan Soroff gets the winter forecast during a chat with our cover subject, delightful NBC meteorologist and erstwhile Bostonian Dylan Dreyer. Hope your holiday season is equally sunny.

HOW A LOCAL CHEF IS TURNING SURPLUS PRODUCE INTO HEALTHY, AFFORDABLE MEALS.

Kitchen Magic

The "ugliest-looking tomatoes" left behind at farmers markets and sweet potatoes "the size of a baby" are prized finds for executive chef Ismail Samad of Dorchester's Daily Table. The nonprofit grocery store sells farms' leftover produce and other edibles picked up by Boston Area Gleaners, dairy products from companies like Stonyfield and Hood that are nearing their sell-by dates and proteins that are purchased at a discount. "You've got all this food that's perfectly fine, but on the other hand, so many people can't afford a wholesome meal for their families," says Samad, who previously worked at a Vermont restaurant that followed a similar model. Now, his bustling kitchen transforms surplus foodstuffs into prepared meals that cost less than $4 per portion, made with "perfectly healthy and nutritious food" that may have otherwise been thrown away.

Daily Table is only 6 months old, but its leadership team—including Trader Joe's and Whole Foods execs—is already looking for a second location in the city. "Our kitchen is large enough to become a commissary to support satellite stores," says Samad, who relishes his role cooking for the 300-plus members who shop at the store each day. "You can come in and feed a family of four for under 10 bucks," he adds. "We're really diverting food from the landfill and getting it into people's tummies, which is great." / Meghan Kavanaugh

450 Washington St., Boston (617-506-0219) dailytable.org

FOOD FOR THOUGHT: Ismail Samad is helping families eat well—and affordably—one "ugly-[illegible] tomato" at a time

Collard greens and kale, 99 cents: "That's from about 300 pounds of greens that we got last week."

Sesame ginger noodles with tofu, $1.99: "It was Nasoya tofu that we got at a special price because it had a short code on it."

Coconut curry, $1.99: "This is a Jamaican-style curry with beans, carrots and sweet potatoes that we got from the Gleaners."

Beef chili and brown rice, $1.99: "The tomatoes were picked up at the Chelsea food terminal.... Corn was left over from the Gleaners."

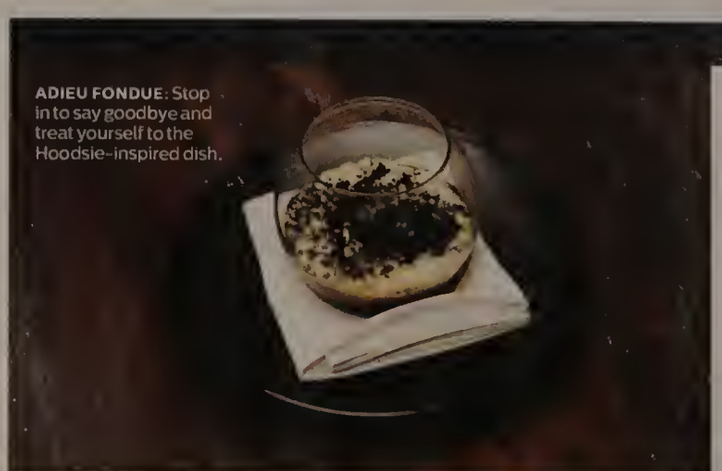
OH MAMA!

SWEET CHEEKS' CHEF/OWNER GETS SET TO OPEN A SOUTHEAST ASIAN EATERY A FEW DOORS DOWN.

Tiger Mama
1363 Boylston St., Boston
(617-425-6262)
tigermamaboston.com

Southeast Asia is close to Tiffani Faison's heart—it's where she spent a five-week vacation with her now wife when their relationship was just getting serious. And now the region's cuisine is at the heart of her second restaurant, Tiger Mama, slated to open in mid-December in the Fenway neighborhood, a few doors down from Sweet Cheeks Q on Boylston Street.



"For me, done well, it's the best food in the world," says Faison, who's debuting a menu of about 50 dishes split into seven categories: snacks, cold and fresh, crispy and spicy, broths and curries, rich and earthy, noodles and rice, and banquet. While it may be tough to match the level of fervor surrounding Sweet Cheeks' biscuits, favorites are expected to include the crispy papaya salad with crispy morning glory, mint and a tomato chili vinaigrette as well as the banh xeo, a Hanoi-style crepe with spicy ground shrimp, herbs and lettuce, served with nuoc cham. Lively presentations feature in plates like the shrimp Saigon, with grilled and chilled shrimp marinated in coconut milk and served with fish sauce, garlic and tomatoes on a coconut shell.

"We're swinging for the fences in some of the presentations. We're not trying to be subtle," Faison says. "It looks like vacation, and it should feel like vacation."

The 135-seat restaurant also has a tropical vacation vibe. The frame of a long-tail boat hangs over a bar in the front left area, while tables, banquettes and a jungle-like wall full of herbs fill the space leading to the back. That rear section includes a hightop communal table in the open kitchen and a dressed-up Tiki bar that'll be doling out Tiki cocktails in addition to a wine list full of food-friendly bottles such as dry rieslings.

Faison was initially reluctant about the location, which had seen three other restaurants close in the past 5 years. But she eventually agreed, giving back 1,500 square feet of space in the front along Boylston Street to make the room more manageable.

"Everyone who walked in walked to the left, and it was impossible to get anyone in the back. ... We built a second bar in the back to get a lot of energy back there, and we opened up the kitchen and put in a communal hightop table so people will be sitting in the kitchen with us. It's the idea of the physical space and the menu giving people varied experiences to come back for," Faison says. "When we first started this, I said, 'This wouldn't be the place I choose.' But now I love it."

ADIEU FONDUE: Stop in to say goodbye and treat yourself to the Hoodsie-inspired dish.

Good Eats: A Final Bow

If you've ever had a Hoodsie Sundae Cup, you'll understand how Clio chef/owner Ken Oringer made the leap from the novelty ice cream to his black truffle fondue. One of a handful of Clio classics the chef has resurrected to celebrate the Back Bay restaurant's final days before its Dec. 31 close, the two-layer soup is inspired by the dessert's scoop-from-the-bottom design. To eat it, dig down into the glass fishbowl for a spoonful of the inky, truffle-enhanced broth and pull up through the silky celery root mousseline surface, garnished with bitter cocoa. / Elizabeth Bomze

Q&A

ABOUT A GIRL

When film producer and Emerson professor Linda Reisman read David Ebershoff's novel The Danish Girl in 2003, she knew she wanted to see it on the big screen. More than a decade later, she's helped make that dream a reality: The book inspired by the life of artist Lili Elbe, one of the first people to undergo a sex reassignment surgery, has been adapted into a film starring Eddie Redmayne. We chatted with Reisman about the film, which hits local theaters this month and is already garnering Oscar buzz. / Alexondro Covollo

REEL TALK: Emerson producer in-residence Linda Reisman, above, served as executive producer on The Danish Girl

WHAT WERE SOME THINGS THAT WERE IMPORTANT TO YOU IN MAKING THIS FILM? I think that we all wanted to really respectfully represent issues around the transgender process. And the actors did a tremendous amount of research, as did the director. We all did. The thing about The Donish Girl is that, at its core, it's a love story. And it's a story of a marriage that disintegrates, but also asks the question: How far do you go for those that you deeply love? And how does love change for someone? I think that the integrity of those questions was very important to all of us.

DID YOU INITIALLY HAVE ANYONE IN MIND FOR CERTAIN ROLES? For a long time Nicole Kidman was attached to the project, and she wanted Einar. And at different times we had different actresses attached for Gerda. We had Charlize Theron at one point, we had Gwyneth Paltrow, we had Rachel Weisz. But honestly, when [director] Tom Hooper originally read the script, I think in 2008, he immediately thought of Eddie Redmayne, who he had worked with on Elizabeth I, before they did Les Mis together. And when a director so assuredly has an actor who he knows can really portray that role and all the complexities and dimensions required of it, it's impossible to suggest other actors. So from the moment that I heard he wanted Eddie Redmayne, I thought, my God, he'll be amazing. And this was before he shot The Theory of Everything

THERE WAS SOME PUSHBACK FROM THE TRANSGENDER COMMUNITY ABOUT A CIS MALE BEING CAST AS EINAR. WHAT'S YOUR RESPONSE TO THAT? I think we all feel very strongly that Hollywood needs to step it up here, with casting transgender actors in a variety of roles ... But secondly I would say that from the moment Tom Hooper read the script he had a particular actor in mind, and the truth is that Einar is in three quarters of the movie maybe, and Lili is maybe a quarter. And it's a very complex question, who can sustain the dimension of this character and this kind of transformation? And the reality of getting a movie like this made—which was not expensive at all, by Hollywood standards—by a studio, it requires a strong ability to be able to distribute and sell internationally. We have to have actors that have an international box-office presence. And that's a harsh reality of having a movie like this made. I think that Eddie Redmayne has been so sensitive to this issue, has researched, has spent a lot of time with transgender actresses and people in the trans community, and has very eloquently been able to have that conversation. But I think being able to be part of this conversation at a national level only means that there will be more conversation

ANY ADVICE FOR A YOUNG PERSON HOPING TO BREAK INTO THE FILM INDUSTRY? You have to have a story, something you want to say, and very passionately be able to persevere and stand by that vision. And what I always say to my students is "Be nice to the assistants!" Because the assistants are the people who are going to be running the studio one day.

Theater Throwback

Berklee Performance Center has a big birthday this month. Having made its debut on Dec. 20, 1915, as the Fenway Theater, a movie house equipped with a vaudeville-ready stage (just in case those newfangled motion pictures didn't catch on), the venue went on to host plays, concerts by the likes of Frank Zappa and even rehearsal sessions for Aerosmith before being bought in 1972 by Berklee, whose students now serve as ushers, crew and box office clerks for more than 200 events each year. They're celebrating the centennial on Dec. 16 with 100 Years of Musical Theater, a revue that'll have the Berklee Musical Theater Ensemble and Musical Theater Orchestra taking a decade-by-decade walk down Broadway's memory lane. Dream Catcher®

Legendary Toasted Chestnut Liqueur

The origins of Dream Catcher, an old Gaelic recipe, started in a historic farm house with a pot still in County Cavan, Ireland.

A farmer was inspired to blend an elixir of the natural flavor of toasted chestnuts and other natural flavors with select Irish Spirits to create the superb taste of a toasted Irish Liqueur. This wonderful treasure was discovered several years ago and is now coming to the world.

The farmer claimed it was a "Dream worth catching".

Dream Catcher Hot Chestnut

Pour a shot of Dream Catcher into a brandy glass. Top with an equal part of very hot water. Savor the spectacular, warm taste of toasted chestnuts with select Irish Spirits.

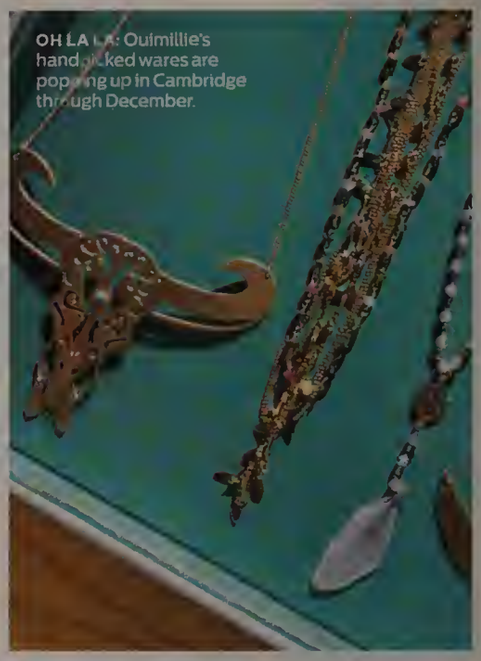
IN A MOURVÈDRE MOOD



Mourvèdre qualifies as one of the most incognito classic red grape varieties. Sturdy, aromatic and bursting with dark red-berry flavors, it's largely an anonymous blending partner. It's the most impactful ingredient in many high-quality Châteauneufs-du-Pape and other southern Rhône reds, as well as the backbone of Bandol from Provence. But it also makes sumptuous varietal wine in Spain, where it's known as Monastrell, or in California, where it often goes under the name Mataro. Originating in Alicante, in southeastern Spain, it is a thick-skinned red grape that thrives in hot climates and, in fact, doesn't taste fully ripe until sugars approach potential alcohol levels of 15 percent. These three are right at home alongside traditional feasts on your holiday dinner table. / Sandy Block

TARIMA HILL OLD VINES MONASTRELL, ALICANTE, 2012
Spain remains the best place on earth today for delicious, reasonably priced red wine. A stunner in the deep-value category that tastes at least twice as expensive as its price, this Tarima Hill bottle should satisfy almost any red wine lover. Alicante's vineyards experience vast day/night temperature differentials during the summer, promoting bold, ripe flavors as well as structure. This big-boy red has a peppery, wild juicy quality, with notes of mocha, clove and licorice. Enjoy it with pork or with duck.
$18, The Wine & Cheese Cask, Somerville

CLINE ANCIENT VINES MOURVÈDRE, CONTRA COSTA, 2013
Hailing from vineyards that aren't far from San Francisco, this is a meaty, flavorful and serious red with intriguing bay leaf, tobacco, floral and blueberry scents. Some jammy black-fruit notes and grippy tannins allow this brash California wine to stand up to that most American of holiday dishes, roast turkey.
$14, Cambridge Wine & Spirits

ARTADI EL SEQUÉ, ALICANTE, 2010
Also from the birthplace of the grape, this is a lavishly flavored old-vine cuvee made by Rioja specialist Vina Artadi. It's powerful and smoky, with savory herb and gamey notes, but the lingering impression is a combination of lush black cherry and blackberry fruit. With an estimated evolution of 10 to 12 years, this is still very young, but—if decanted and left to sit for an hour—it can be enjoyed now as a delicious counterpoint to the holiday roast.

FATHER FIGURED

A SON DISCOVERS A DIFFERENT SIDE OF HIS DAD IN THIS BOSTON-SET THRILLER.

The Fixer* by Joseph Finder
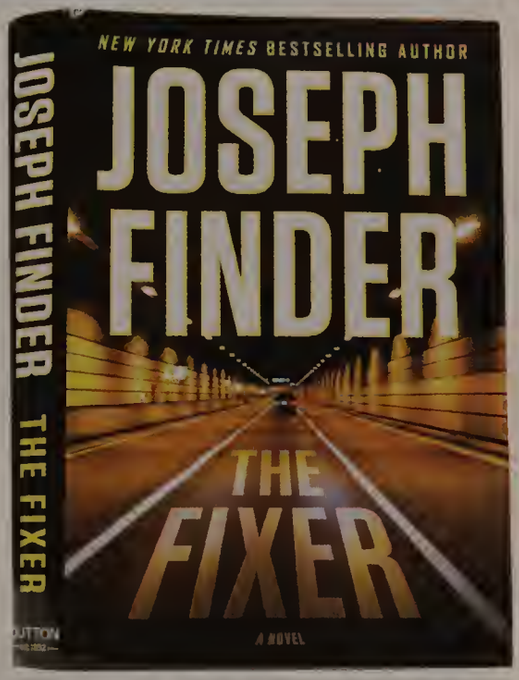
Published by Dutton, 384 pages, $28

BOSTON WRITER JOSEPH FINDER'S LATEST thriller asks: How well do we know our parents, really? Having lost his cushy magazine job, his blond fiancee and his Back Bay apartment, former investigative journalist Rick Hoffman needs a place to crash. So he starts to clean out his stroke-stricken father Lenny's house, where he discovers a dangerously delicious $3.4 million in cash in a crawl space. Before long, unsavory characters come after his treasure, pursuing, threatening and beating Rick, who slithers, lizardlike, between hotels and rental cars.



Before the fog of illness overtook him 18 years ago, Lenny did his lawyering in the Combat Zone; his clients included a strip joint called Jugs, and his sketchy work involved payoffs, bribes and shakedowns. Rick, reviving his investigative skills, tracks down Dad's old co-conspirators, including the philosophically sleazy Joel and other guardedly guilty coworkers. Along the way, Rick discovers a hidden side of his father, learning that he had actually been a left-wing lawyer who defended Black Panthers and Weather Underground members in the '60s, but then drifted depressingly downward to fund those causes. To his further surprise, Rick finds out that Lenny defended him when he'd been kicked out of school for taking a moral stand against a plagiarizing teacher in the student newspaper.

Emboldened, Rick confronts a friend of Lenny's once involved in illegal Big Dig doings, including a cover-up after the death of a family in the Williams Tunnel. The plot's surprising turns lead to the heart of Finder's story, a bracing lesson about understanding and appreciating one's parent, even if sadly too late.

FROM PAGE 91: The Combat Zone was Boston's red-light district, an area of porn houses and hookers, that by the 1990s was mostly gone.

"Your father was a strong believer in the first amendment."

"I know." Leonard Hoffman: the Clarence Darrow of pole dancing. "Those are cash businesses. I assume some of those clients preferred to pay him in cash, right?" ◆

PENN, ULTIMATE: Quirky attractions like Conflict Kitchen and the Center for PostNatural History aren't far from the Indigo Hotel.

Traveler's Checks

Do as the locals do and take the 28X bus from the airport to the Oakland neighborhood. It runs every 30 minutes and will cost you a mere $3.75—exact change, please.

Pittsburgh's dress code is so casual it might be called "style-unconscious." A Steelers T-shirt and jeans will get you in just about anywhere.

The Escape Artist / Carolyn Faye Fox

WORTH A PITT STOP

OFFBEAT TREASURES ABOUND IN PENNSYLVANIA'S SECOND LARGEST CITY.

LET'S SAY YOU'D LIKE TO GET AWAY FOR A few days of fun and frolic. You want a cheap, easy flight, you'd like to pack light, and you're up for something different. Something you won't find in Boston, or in any city but—wait for it—Pittsburgh. Pittsburgh? Yes, the Rust Belt city known for the Primanti Bros.' french fry-stuffed sandwiches offers other attractions that are undeniably unique. Consider Conflict Kitchen, an art project/restaurant that serves food from countries in conflict with the U.S. government. Or take the Center for PostNatural History, an oddball outpost that brings together sea monkeys, alcoholic rats and genetically modified goats. Of course, there's also the world-class Andy Warhol Museum, the largest building dedicated to one artist in the entire country.

Pittsburgh is more likely to be cloudy than sunny; winters can be gloomy. Fortunately, indoor activities are many and varied. Home to the renowned Carnegie Museums of Art and Natural History, the Oakland neighborhood is also where you'll find Phipps Conservatory and Botanical Gardens, housed under the silvered domes of an enormous Victorian "glass house." There are more than a dozen lush, light-filled rooms to explore, whether your taste runs to spectacular orchids or carnivorous plants. In the central Palm Court, spiky plants mingle with sinuous Chihuly glass sculptures, creating a stop-you-in-your-tracks tableau; on the rooftop, bonsai trees' plaques boast of how many decades they've been "in training."

If you've spent a morning at Phipps, lunch at Conflict Kitchen is a short walk away, across one of Pittsburgh's many bridges. First, the bad news: Conflict Kitchen offers takeout only, so you'll dine outdoors at one of the many tables under a huge nearby tent on the edge of Schenley Plaza. Now, the good news: The food is excellent, reasonably priced and authentically prepared, served with a side of culture and current events. A recent Cuban menu offered slow-roasted pork in mojo sauce, fried plantains and empanadas filled with guava and cheese, all wrapped in paper printed with interviews with Cubans living in the U.S. or their native country. Other featured countries have included Venezuela, Afghanistan and North Korea, and every iteration is accompanied by a total redesign of the restaurant's storefront, as well as performances and discussions.

For a post-lunch nap, plus a place to stay overnight, try the oversized beds at the new Hotel Indigo. A beautifully restored boutique hotel in the rapidly gentrifying East Liberty neighborhood, it offers all the usual upscale amenities, from Wi-Fi to a 24-hour fitness studio. In the lobby, a sleek terrazzo marble floor mimics an aerial view of the three rivers that meet in Pittsburgh: the Ohio, the Allegheny and the Monongahela. The hotel's restaurant, Wallace's TapRoom, serves breakfast, lunch and dinner, with an emphasis on all things local; think pierogis, smoked kielbasa and short ribs braised in locally brewed stout. Best of all, the Indigo provides complimentary transportation within a 3-mile radius of the hotel, so you won't have to depend on the somewhat unreliable Pittsburgh cabs. The Carnegie Museums and Conflict Kitchen are less than 3 miles away, as are Google's offices, the University of Pittsburgh, Carnegie Mellon and East End Brewing, one of the city's premier breweries.

Also within that range is the Highland Park neighborhood, home to the Pittsburgh Zoo and PPG Aquarium, where acres of steamy indoor rainforest help you forget the gray weather and remind you what fun it is to watch cotton-top tamarins and gorillas watching you right back. A few blocks' walk from the zoo will take you to Bryant Street, the lively main drag of Highland Park, where funky shops and restaurants are proliferating and a sidewalk plaque marks the house where jazz great Billy Eckstine was born. On Bryant, neighborhood mainstay Park Bruges serves lunch, dinner and weekend brunch, most of it with a Belgian flair. Although the menu changes seasonally, PEI mussels are always available in at least four preparations, such as tomato saffron with fennel and orange zest, along with signature frites. For dessert, cross the street and hit Food Glorious Food, one of the city's best bakeries. Order anything from a slice of marjolaine to a napoleon and you'll be happy. One caveat: The bakers can get a little crazy with the macarons. Exteriors are always delicate and crackly, the filling perfectly creamy, but bubblegum and candy apple aren't optimum flavors.

Just past Highland Park, in the Garfield neighborhood, is the aforementioned Center for PostNatural History. From the outside, it looks like a run-of-the-mill storefront, but a visit is a life-changing experience, literally: Its exhibits explore living things that humans have altered using genetic engineering, tissue culture and selective breeding. There's no judgment here, no Monsanto-bashing, just access to specimens such as a ribless mouse embryo and a transgenic mosquito. It's a fascinating cabinet of curiosities and a resource that resonates with implications for our shared future. Hours are extremely limited, but like many of Pittsburgh's quirkier treasures, it's well worth seeking out. ◆

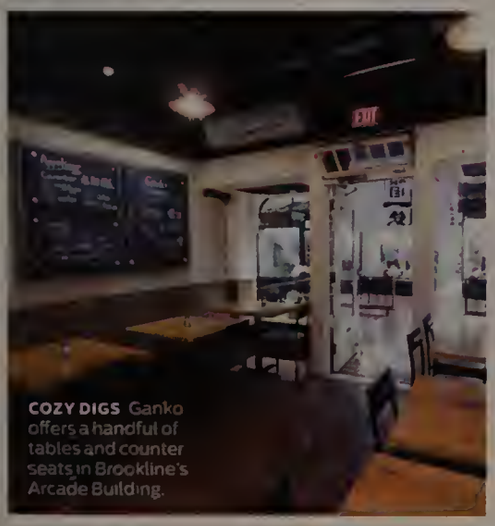
NOODLE NIRVANA

GANKO ITTETSU FATTENS THE RANKS OF BOSTON'S FIRST-RATE RAMEN SHOPS.

Older readers of The Improper may remember the dark ages before Boston's ramen renaissance, when a meager fistful of venues of variable quality served Japan's most famous noodle soup. A glimmer of hope appeared in 2012, when Guchi's Midnight Ramen, a short-lived, wildly popular pop-up series by a couple of local fine-dining chefs, revealed a ravenous local appetite for quality ramen. Boston has since seen a steady influx of purveyors of regional ramen styles from all across Japan, with many Western chefs honing their own less-traditional variants. While I'd love to credit this sea change to the brilliant 1985 movie Tampopo, it likely has more to do with the ascent of galloping food-nerd culture and certain of its idols, like David Chang. Whatever its roots, there's no longer any excuse for confusing carefully crafted ramen with the 10-for-a-dollar instant-ramen packets that still stretch many a starving student's food budget. Riding this welcome wave is the new Ganko Ittetsu Ramen, a tiny Coolidge Corner joint serving a gorgeous, sophisticated trio of ramens in the style of Sapporo in northern Japan.

A refreshing start is the lone appetizer of cucumber ($5), cool, crisp chunks barely pickled in a mixture of salt and koji (the mold that provides fermentation to foundational Japanese foodstuffs like soy sauce, miso and sake) and dressed with sesame oil and soy sauce flavored with bonito flakes and kelp. Eminently simple yet boasting a subtle richness, it betokens the umami-rich alchemy of the flavors to follow. The only beverages are cold bottles of unsweetened green tea or green/jasmine tea ($3 each). Beyond that, there's nothing but the main event: three types of ramen, all based on a deep-flavored, light-bodied chicken/pork broth, served in modest-sized but filling bowls. Any ramen-ya must be judged on the quality of its noodles, and Ganko hits a high bar on that score, serving a slender, kinky, straw-toned alkaline noodle purportedly made to its custom specifications by Sapporo's Nishiyama Seimen Co. It's bouncy, holds onto a bit of broth and has a delectably tender/chewy texture: a pretty special noodle by local standards.

Shoyu ramen ($11) is the lightest, most limpid style here, a fine place to start. As with most Sapporo-style ramen, the soy-sauce-based tare (the mixture of salty, umami-rich ingredients that give each soup its namesake flavor) is wok-cooked briefly with the broth and vegetables. Floating atop those great noodles are islets of tender shredded pork shoulder, onion, corn niblets, seasoned scallions, a five-minute egg (half an exquisitely soft-boiled egg, the yolk just slightly runny), a rectangle of papery nori and a sprinkling of sesame seeds. This is a bowl of unassuming, soul-nourishing comfort, though you can vary it with any combination of six optional add-ins (more on these below) and maybe a dose of white pepper from the table shaker.



Tan-tan ramen ($13) takes the familiar dish of Sichuan-style dandan noodles and crosses it with the soupiness of ramen. Starting from a tare of spicy sesame paste, it's garnished with sauteed pickled vegetables, seasoned ground pork, scallions, crimson-toned chili-infused sesame oil, a curl of wakame (a leafy, slippery, dark-green sea vegetable) and sesame seeds. The capsicum heat isn't particularly molten; heat-seekers should opt for an add-in of spicy garlic oil ($1). The opaque broth is dominated by the buttery, nutty sesame paste, making this a homelier, heavier, less multi-dimensional bowl than its brethren. To my palate and eye, the star here is the house specialty of miso ramen ($13) in the signature Sapporo style. Its luscious, translucent broth, insistently flavored with miso tare, is crowned with a lovely, fatty slice of simmered pork belly, sauteed napa cabbage, onions, mung-bean sprouts, scallions, wakame, corn, julienned ginger, a five-minute egg and sesame seeds. It is, in a word, glorious.

The trencherman can add tasty bulk to any bowl with an extra slice of pork belly ($2) or kaedama ($2), a top-up of noodles that you should order after you've finished your first noodles but still have some broth left. An extra five-minute egg or two ($1 each) is a brilliant protein-enhancer, but can arrive a little cold; let it warm up in the broth a bit, or stir the yolk into the soup. To add variety on repeat visits, consider a dose of black garlic oil ($1), garlic slowly caramelized until it blackens, then blended into sesame oil; the result is inky and deliciously bittersweet. Crunchy garlic ($1) is another terrific topper, a dryish, tawny crumble that adds pleasurable crunch but is not fiercely garlicky enough to ruin date night.

Set in the middle of the first level of the ancient, crumbling former beauty that is the Arcade Building, Ganko features an attractive but typically spare, no-nonsense space: five counter seats and 14 more at tables, where you're expected to briskly slurp down your noodles in that brief window when their texture is just so, then make way for other hungry patrons. It might be hard to convince a time traveler from distant 2010 of the fact, but Boston is now blessed with a bevy of fine ramen shops, and Ganko Ittetsu sits proudly at the top of that heap. ◆

Q: HOW DO I QUICKLY GET MY SKIN IN SHAPE SO I AM "GLOWING" FOR HOLIDAY PARTIES?

A: The holidays are a time when we want to look our best. There are lots of photo ops, parties and family gatherings. As you plan your wardrobe and make a hair appointment, remember to also make an appointment for a skin care treatment.

Skin cannot look radiant if it is not well cleansed and well exfoliated. A great option is a light chemical peel, microdermabrasion, or a comprehensive facial with the addition of a light exfoliation. All of these treatments can be done in 30 to 60 minutes and the effects will last for the duration of the holiday season.

The best treatment option the day before or the day of an event is hydrosonic skin therapy. Your skin will truly glow and be "plumped up" through ultrasonic infusion of hydrating serums. Time to call SkinHealth for your appointment! Happy Holidays!

IN THE HEART OF THE SEA ★
Starring Chris Hemsworth, Benjamin Walker, Ben Whishaw, Cillian Murphy, Tom Holland, Charlotte Riley, Michelle Fairley, Frank Dillane, Paul Anderson, Joseph Mawle, Jordi Mollà, Donald Sumpter, Jamie Sives and Brendan Gleeson. Written by Charles Leavitt, based on a story by Leavitt, Rick Jaffa and Amanda Silver, adapted from the book In the Heart of the Sea: The Tragedy of the Whaleship Essex by Nathaniel Philbrick. Directed by Ron Howard. At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

Movies / Brett Michel

LOST AT SEA

RON HOWARD'S LOOK AT THE ORIGINS OF MOBY DICK IS A WHALE-SIZED DISASTER.

WATCHING IN THE HEART OF THE SEA, the terrible new film from Ron Howard, one gets the sense that the ehild actor-turned-direetor eouldn't quite deeide which baseball eap he wanted to wear. Is it the one belonging to the crowd-pleasing filmmaker behind feel-good entertainments like Night Shift (1982), Splash (1984) and Parenthood (1989)? Or the Oscar-baiting journeyman behind based-on-true-story period pieees like Cinderella Man (2005), Frost/Nixon (2008) and A Beautiful Mind (2001), the film that finally netted him a Best Direetor and a Best Picture statue?

Well, from this seafaring drama's opening credits, it's obvious that Howard is more interested in donning Steven Spielberg's eap, sinee we're immediately immersed in Jaws territory. Howard is working on a bigger eanvas than Spielberg's 1975 proto-blockbuster here, though. It's Moby Dick big.

In fact, Herman Melville is a key eharacter in the film, whieh opens in 1850 with the bearded author (played by Ben Whishaw, Q in the Daniel Craig Bond films) arriving in Nantueket, determined to talk to Thomas Niekerson (Calvary's Brendan Gleeson), the last surviving crew member of the Essex, a whaling ship that met an unfortunate end during its maiden voyage in 1820. Salty old Nickerson doesn't want to dredge up the past, but his wife (Miehelle Fairley of HBO's Game of Thrones) insists, telling Melville in a modern-day Masshole patois that her husband's "soul is in torment, and in need of eonfession."

Cue the film's flashback strueture, whieh finds Nickerson recounting not his story, but the story of Owen Chase (The Avengers' Chris Hemsworth), the Essex's first mate, because why not?

Chase has been tasked with bringing 200 barrels of whale oil baek from the Essex's first expedition, but he finds himself "babysitting a ehinless green-horn." That's landlubber George Pollard (Benjamin Walker), the son of the Essex's patron. He's quite literally been grandfathered in as the vessel's first-time captain (a position Chase had been promised) beeause his grandfather and great-grandfather are eredited with ereating the whaling industry.

Almost everything on land and sea looks like it was shot against a blue screen nearly 60 years ago.

During the first night at sea, Pollard, Chase and shipmate Matthew Joy (Cillian Murphy) enjoy an extravagant dinner in the eaptain's quarters, where Pollard asserts himself by trying to embar-rass Chase, telling Joy that Chase was "essentially orphaned" when the first mate's peasant father was sent to prison. Exeusing himself, Chase joins the crew on the deck below as they're served their slop.

One young man is having trouble finding his sea legs, and soon this teenager is barfing all over Chase's boots. This queasy lad is the younger version of Gleeson's Thomas Niek-erson; he's played by Tom Holland, and although you may not know the name now, you surely will when he makes his bow in next May's Captain America: Civil War as the new face of web-spinning Peter Parker.

Niekerson is also an orphan, and while the two don't become father and son surrogates, they do weather many storms together, including the massive squall that their eaptain steers them into on their second day at sea in a foolhardy attempt to see what his men are made of. During an ensuing battle of egos, Pollard demands the resignation of his first mate, whom he tries to publiely shame, referring to him as "the son of a farmer who bullied his way into an offieer's uniform."

Ah, but this film is no Mutiny on the Bounty. In faet, the film's script—written by Charles Leavitt and based on a story treatment Leavitt, Riek Jaffa and Amanda Silver adapted from Nathaniel Philbriek's 2000 book—has no idea what it wants to be.

Sure, the movie is being marketed as "the true eneounter that inspired the myth of Moby Diek," but by the time the massive white whale that sup-posedly swims at the heart of this film's sea shows up—a full year into the Essex's voyage—Howard and his writers don't have any idea of what to do with it. Neither do his army of visual effeets artists, who have put together a pieture that looks less real-istie than John Huston's 1956 adaptation of Moby Dick. Not only does this film's "demon" look like the digital ereation it is, but almost everything on land and sea looks like it was shot against a blue sereen nearly 60 years ago. Like Huston, Howard shot in Spain's Canary Islands, but he might as well have shot in his bathtub.

This is the worst-looking studio pieture in mem-ory, whieh is truly shocking, sinee it's been lensed by Anthony Dod Mantle, Oscar-winning einematogra-pher of Slumdog Millionaire. Alas, he's employing the same horrifie digital eolor eorreetion that your aunt might use on Instagram photos of her food—and it's even less appetizing.

Howard just eame off direeting one of the sexi-est films of his eareer, Rush, whieh also starred Chris Hemsworth as a Formula One driver who serewed anything that moved. The only ones getting serewed in this new film are the audienee, who've paid to sit through one of Howard's limpest efforts. ◆

NOT SO SILENT NIGHT

NASHVILLE-BRED COUPLE CONJURES EMOTIVE FOLK-POP WITH CHRISTMAS SPIRIT.

JOHNNYSWIM
plays Royale on Dec. 12.

As the youngest daughter of record produeer Bruee Sudano and Boston-born diseo ieon Donna Summer, Amanda Sudano grew up around musie, absorbing the sounds of Otis Redding, Sam Cooke and Joni Mitchell, as well as her mother.

"My mom would go out to the store, and people would recognize her, but it wasn't like a big deal, like 'Let's keep it moving and get the Cheerios,'" Sudano says. While she and her sisters saw their parents' passion for music, "we didn't see the business or famc side," she says. "It was morc about doing what you love."

Sudano shared that love for musie from an early age, writing songs in prcschool that she rceorded in her dad's studio, and her mom nurturcd her singing. "Shc just told me to keep doing it, 'eause as a kid, I was super, super shy," says Sudano, 33. "She'd hear me singing around the house and in my room, and if anyone told me to sing in publie, I'd run the other way. She encouraged me to not be afraid."

Now Sudano runs her own family-rooted act, Johnnyswim, with singer/guitarist and husband Abner Ramirez. Together, they spin a burnished, emotive blend of folk, pop, blues and soul that hit a peak in 2014 with the release of their debut album Diamonds, followed by A Johnnyswim Christmas. They'll support that EP for a second holiday season when they play Royalc with their band on Dec. 12 (ahead of a live album and Palla dia cable special recorded for early 2016).

"It's definitely our favorite time of year in a genuine way," Ramirez says in a joint eall from his mother's home in Jacksonville, Fla., the day before Thanksgiving. He says they plan an even split of Christmas songs and originals on tour. "But we edit out some of our sadder Johnnyswim songs. We try to keep it up for the holidays!"

A Johnnyswim Christmas features the LA-based duo's surging tradeoffs in "Have Yourself a Merry Little Christmas," a ehoral-styled "O Come All Ye Faithful" and a sultry "What Are You Doing New Year's Eve?" It's more tempered than the urgent

"We do our best to honor that emotion, that sense... in whatever we write or creatc, even when we cover a Christmas song."

Diamonds, whieh reflected the loss of both Sudano's mother (Summer died from cancer in 2012) and Ramirez's father and begins with the title traek's opening salvo, "In the wake of every heartache, in the depth of evcry fear, thcre were diamonds, diamonds waiting to break out of here."

"Wc do our best to honor that emotion, that scnse, that feeling, in whatever we write or ereate, even when we eover a Christmas song," says Ramirez, 32, who grew up listening to Cuban musie, especially passionate love songs or boleros.

In eontrast to Sudano, Ramirez envisioned a musieal eareer. "For sure, at 6 years old, realizing you eould have a job singing songs, that was the only plan," he says. Sudano counters, "My biggest issue was if I was good enough to aetually make a living doing it." She suceessfully pursued modeling on the side in New York.

They first met at chureh in Nashville, where Sudano's family had moved during her teens, although they didn't really eonnect until four years later, when she and Ramirez met at a eoffee shop in 2005 and he invited her to one of his shows. "I knew he was super-charming and wonderful, but I had no idea he did anything musieal," Sudano says. "As soon as I found that out, I was like, 'Oh, snap, it's about to go down.'"

Ramirez had already taken an interest, noting he was "cyber-stalking" her for some time. "I said I was not trying to really pursue [musie] anymore beeause I got burned," Ramirez recalls of their conversation, referring to a failed reeord deal. "And she said, 'That's stupid. We should write.' And I thought, 'Absolutely we should write...' It was purely an exeuse to be alone together."

They soon formed Johnnyswim, married in 2009 and now have a 9-month-old son who joins them on tour. "One of the greatest strengths of a marriage is to have adventure," Ramirez says, "and we eertainly have more than our fair share of adventure." ◆

GAME TIME

WHEN IT COMES TO KIDS' ATHLETICS, I'M KIND OF A BAD SPORT.

AS A KID, I NEVER UNDERSTOOD OVERLY intense sports parents. I had a grade-school basketball coach who once bellowed at our team, "What do you think this is, a game?" When that preposterous question elicited the snickering it deserved, he really snapped, screaming, "You can all blow it out your asses!" Everyone thought that was great, except of course for his son, who was mortified that ol' pops imagined himself the Bobby Knight of the elementary gym instead of a glorified baby sitter presiding over eight pudgy fifth-graders.

But now that I am a parent with my own sports-aged kid, I'm starting to understand—understand that a lot of parents are total lunatics. My older kid, Rhys, is 5, so we enrolled him in a youth indoor soccer league. To quote Ed O'Neill on Modern Family: "World's worst sport. World's worst players of it."

You wouldn't think anybody would have high athletic expectations for 5-year-olds, but you'd be wrong. People scream at their kids nonstop, their voices fraught with either excitement or frustration. The cheering gets very specific, as if they think they can control their child via voice commands, like a live-action Siri. I stay mostly quiet, but when Rhys kicks the ball into the wrong goal, I do what any sane adult would do. I yell, "Great job, Jaden!" and pretend that I'm cheering for a different kid. Maybe there isn't even a Jaden, but there probably is.

Most of the time I don't have to worry about Rhys kicking the ball in the wrong goal, because most of the time he's nowhere near the ball. He might be over at the water fountain getting a drink, or standing idly on the periphery of a scrum of more-determined children, or holding his hands over his ears and staring at the scoreboard because he hates getting surprised by the buzzer. The halves are 10 minutes long, so he spends about 18 minutes per game eyeballing the clock and doing the earmuffs move. This makes me feel better about not cheering for him, since he wouldn't hear me anyway.

I confess that I'm not exactly encouraging soccer because I find the game excruciating no matter who's playing. Personally, I prefer sports that require cool equipment and hand-eye coordination, like jai alai or freestyle motocross. Unfortunately, there are no local youth leagues for those, so our other extracurricular activity is swimming. This, at least, is a useful life skill. And I've heard that some people, after learning to swim, sometimes attempt to swim faster than other people in the water, in the manner of a competition or sport. Maybe he could get into that if things don't work out on land.

Swim lessons are nice because of the minimal parental intensity. You don't have to cheer at swim lessons. But you do have to use the locker room, and shepherding a 5-year-old through the public shower process is guaranteed to be the low point of any day. At this age, kids don't understand concepts such as "Don't touch the walls of the shower," or "Don't put your towel on the floor and then pick it up and use it," or "Don't stand outside the shower and pee into it." In the pool, he's learning the backstroke. In the locker room, he's learning that the bathing-suit-drying centrifuge thing is covered in the bacteria of a thousand butts. Why would you put your bathing suit in there? Just let it stay wet! Better yet, incinerate it.

Swim lessons are nice because of the minimal parental intensity. You don't have to cheer...

He's also learning about locker room culture, which dictates that the amount of time you spend wandering around naked is directly proportional to your age. I think there's one guy in his 90s who just lives in the locker room and doesn't own any clothes. In any case, 5-year-olds tend to find their way around a room in the manner of a defective Roomba, getting distracted, blundering into things and generally spacing out. And when you're 3 feet tall, you don't want to aimlessly wander around in a men's locker room, because the thing you'll blunder into will be a droopy pair of Hanes. If you're lucky.

Maybe I'll get more enthusiastic about extracurricular activities once the skill level improves a bit. But I don't know. I'd like to think that I won't get all delusional even if my kid eventually kicks the ball into the proper goal. I merely hope that if he keeps playing, he'll learn that true success in sports doesn't hinge on whether your team wins or loses. What matters is that you play well enough individually to be cool and popular. That's true whether you're talking about soccer or swimming or actual awesome sports like freestyle motocross. And if you want to be popular, it's important to have non-embarrassing parents, ideally ones who don't even identify themselves as your parents. Go Jaden! ◆

SAME OL' SONG

SOUND ADVICE ON MARITAL GRIPES, GREEDY RELATIVES AND NOSY INQUISITORS.

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

I love my husband; we have been married for 12 years, but there is one pet peeve about him that I can't shake anymore. Every time the radio comes on, he sings along with every part of the music, including the instruments. I used to find this habit funny, even charming, in our younger years, but now it just seems childish. I don't want to be a spouse who is nitpicking even the smallest things, but I think I am in the right. How do I approach this situation? We all grow at different rates in relationships; it's normal and natural. It's also normal to find certain things endearing in courtship: Boys will be boys. But women are the real adults, and after a while, the cute-boy stuff can get a little old. We guys may think our routines are still cute and will stay cute forever, not understanding why you don't love it the way you use to. Of course, this growing at different rates can cut both ways. Perhaps he is beginning to tire of something you do that used to make him smile.

The best solution is to have you both laugh at it. Laughter with a little honesty can defuse a lot of things. If that doesn't work, take a yellow legal pad and draw a line down the middle of a page. On the left side, note everything you love about your husband. On the right, list everything you would change. If the good outweighs the bad, tell him to lose the singing... in a loving way. If the bad comes out on top, or if it's 50-50, my crystal ball says that your marital ship is listing to port, or starboard.

I'm a recent widow, and I was the second wife of a man who manufactured winter clothing. He had four children—two daughters, two sons—and five grandchildren. The bulk of the estate went to me in trust, and eventually to his four kids. Now, one of his granddaughters has asked me for $150,000 to start a business. She doesn't care if it's a loan or an outright gift. If that money disappeared completely, it wouldn't change my life, but my husband wanted me to have peace of mind. I don't really want to give the money, but guilt plays a part too. I'm not really sure why, but it does. Ahhh... the key phrase here is "peace of mind." I don't know the details of your husband's estate, but if you find a way to give this money to the granddaughter, in my opinion, your peace of mind will be shattered.

We all get what I call the "Oh my Gods" at 3:30 in the morning, when we're beset by our deepest fears and obsessions. Right now, these night sweats do not have you worrying about money. But if you grant the granddaughter's wish, here are some of the thoughts that will ruin your sleep: What about demands from the other grandchildren? What about their parents putting other pressures on you? What if the $150,000 is blown and the entrepreneur comes back for more?' (Which will happen.) I could go on and on, none of it good news.

MARRIAGE KILLED THE RADIO STAR: In any relationship, there are things we wish our partners would keep to themselves—vocal stylings included

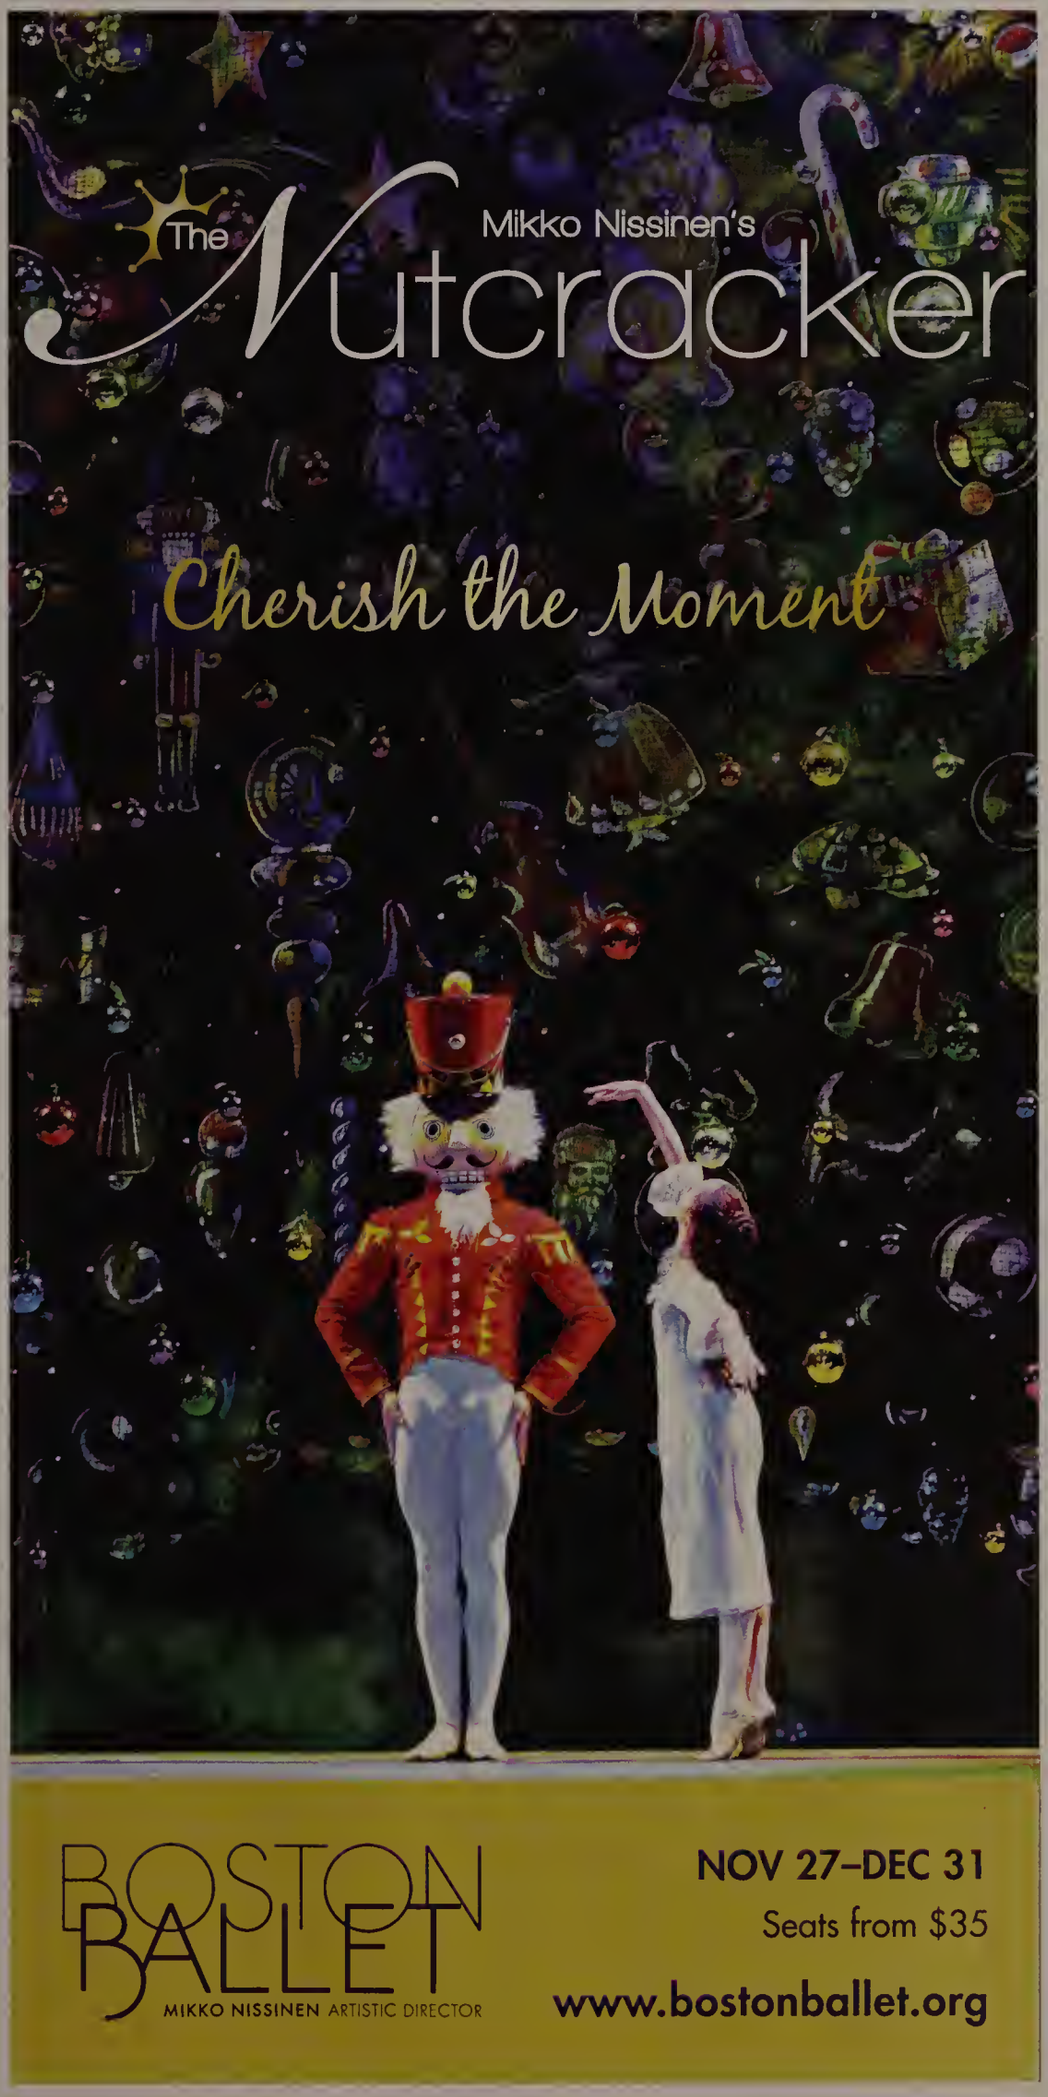
There are too many moving parts to this situation. You can always enlist your trustee to be "Doctor No" and play the bad guy. It's part of a good trustee's job. Preserve your sanity and gently suggest that the granddaughter try crowdfunding.

My company is being taken over by another, bigger company. I have a good job, but I don't run my department, so I hope I'm under the radar and my job will not be in danger. Management tells us all, "Nothing will change." That made us all feel better. But should I be worried? In almost every merger I've ever seen, management says, "Nothing will change," as the two CEOs shake hands and smile. What they should say is "Everything will change." Because it will. It will be a honeymoon at first, when everyone pretends to love each other. Then, I hate to tell you, the cuts will begin.



Above all, you should not panic, and you should show no weakness. But you should, starting now, work on your resume, just in case. Make sure you put something on your resume that jumps out at the viewer—serious bird watching, still playing rugby, something that separates you from the crowd. Most important, when you have the attention of a potential new employer, concentrate not on past performance, but on how you can add value to an organization now. They don't care much about the past. They want to know "What can you do for me tomorrow?"

Every time I come home from college, the same people keep asking me about my future. "What's your major?" and "What do you want to do after you graduate?" seem to be the only questions on anyone's mind. The worst part is, I am certain these acquaintances do not care about my answers; they just want a chance to insert advice, which makes me incredibly frustrated. How do I give these people the answers they're looking for with minimal engagement on my part? Better yet, how can I express my frustration without being offensive? Have you ever seen the movie The Graduate with Dustin Hoffman? His character was just out of college and bothered by the same questions. One of his parents' friends gave him memorable one-word advice: "Plastics."

People are well-meaning. Many of them want to help. But they have no idea who you are.

Here's what to say to people who are curious about you: "Honestly, every day is an adventure. For the moment, I'm exploring so many things—and I'm going to keep them, for now, my private wish list. But I will let you know when I narrow down the choices. Thanks, though; I appreciate it."

Always be something of a mystery to others. It keeps them guessing, and you get to maintain your privacy. ◆

Soroff On / Dylan Dreyer

STORM CHASER

THE AWARD-WINNING ANCHOR AIRS HER ON-SCREEN GAFFES, STYLING MISHAPS AND LOVE OF WILD WEATHER.

New Jersey native Dylan Dreyer, 34, has been the weather anchor of NBC News' Weekend Today since 2012 and serves as a midweek weather correspondent for Today and NBC Nightly News with Lester Holt. For nearly six years, Dreyer worked at Boston's WHDH-TV (Channel 7) as the weekday morning meteorologist. In 2008, she was named Boston's Best Meteorologist by The Improper Bostonian. She previously worked in Providence, Rhode Island, and Erie, Pennsylvania. She graduated cum laude from Rutgers University and is a recipient of the American Meteorological Society's prestigious Seal of Approval. She lives in New York with her husband.

Jonathan Soroff: Thing you miss the most about Boston?
Dylan Dreyer: Probably a garage and a backyard. It was a major downsizing when we moved to New York.

Have you ever been caught in the rain without an umbrella? Very often. Particularly now that I work on national news and I focus on the big weather stories, I'll walk outside and say, "Oh, look! It's going to rain today!" My husband's always like "Thanks for the heads up."

Is there a place in the world that you want to visit just because of its weather patterns? There's a place in Venezuela that I'd love to go, where there's lightning like 330 days a year. I'd love to see that. That would be fascinating.

Most boring place to predict the weather? I'd say San Diego. It's just 70 and sunny every single day, with really nothing that interesting happening.

Biggest mistake you ever made in a forecast? I don't make mistakes often. Just kidding. Snowstorms just burn you so badly, because everybody's listening to your forecast. I remember one time, about six years ago, we weren't forecasting a lot of snow, and Cape Cod just got slammed with a foot and a half, out of nowhere. Nobody is happy when that happens.

Are you ever like "I nailed that one right on the head!" Again, back when I was in Boston, I got to the point where I knew the microclimate so well, I'd be like "The clouds will arrive at 2 o'clock. The rain's going to start at 2:30. Then it's going to change over to snow at 3:45..." I'd kinda pat myself on the back on the occasions when that happened.

Biggest on-air gaffe? That happened in Rhode Island. It was daylight saving time. I was on-air, and I said, "Don't forget to turn your clocks back," except that I left the "l" out of "clock." As immature as can be, I burst out laughing so hard. I didn't even pull it together. I just said, "I need to stop talking right now," and we went to a commercial.

Favorite season? Definitely summer. I like it hot and humid with massive thunderstorms. That's what I prefer for my life. But when I'm working, hurricanes and snowstorms are the most fun. They're so interesting.

Worst encounter with a disgruntled viewer? It's not really in person; it's all Twitter now. I haven't had a one-on-one encounter, but Twitter opens up this whole world of opportunity for people to attack you. I've gotten an awful lot of complaints that a bachelor party was ruined because they couldn't go golfing. I take it all so personally, too.

Worst experience with a green screen? It was also in Boston. At WHDH, they had this set-up that made it look like you were standing on top of the number seven. I was goofing around, acting like I was surfing on it. And then I looked over, and Mayor Menino was getting a tour of the station. It was embarrassing.

A historic weather event you wish you'd seen? Al Roker just did a book, The Storm of the Century, on a hurricane at the turn of the century, 1899/1900, that wiped out Galveston, Texas. It would be interesting to go back in time with the knowledge we have now. I can't even imagine what they dealt with. It took days to communicate information. I'd love to take the technology and knowledge we have now and just impress everyone by saving the day.

Favorite weather-related song? I'm going to go with Eddie Rabbitt's "I Love a Rainy Night."

Technological breakthrough that most helps with predicting weather? The more and better computer models that exist. They get more and more accurate. If you go back 50 years ago, a one-day forecast was great. Forty years ago, a two-day forecast was great. We're at the point right now that two and a half to three days out, we can make a really accurate forecast. The scientific calculations are really amazing.

"There's a place in Venezuela that I'd love to go, where there's lightning like 330 days a year. I'd love to see that."

I am obsessed with The Price Is Right, and your grandmother was a record-setting winner on that show. Do you still have any prizes? I do! I love that show. I have a couple of fur coats that I can't wear, because I'm allergic. My brother has some of the furniture. She won a house in Florida, but we sold that. But I have a couple of ball gowns that she won, and I actually fit in those.

What other planet would you like to predict the weather for? I'd like to know what's going on with the hurricane on Jupiter. That hurricane's been just swirling and spinning and just sitting there for millions of years. It would be so fascinating to figure out what the heck is going on with that, but it would also be easy to forecast, because it just hasn't changed.

Ever see old footage of yourself and say, "What was I thinking with that outfit?" With the outfit, with the hair, with everything. My first job in TV, I had such a Jersey accent. My voice was so high, and I said "like" all the time. And at WHDH, for some reason, they made me shop at a store called Caché. I don't know why. I'm not built for their clothes. They're very kind of Miami, and I would wear the tightest clothes. There were blouses with pearls sewn onto the wrists and fur on the collar. It looked so awful on me. Finally I was able to convince them that Banana Republic might be a better fit, but there was actually a website called fugtv.com dedicated to how awful my outfits were.

So is this winter going to be as bad as last year? Well, I think that there is no way it can be as bad. That being said, I do think it's going to be a tough one. Average snowfall for Boston is, I think, around 45 inches. All it takes is a couple of big storms and you're above that. So I think it'll be above normal, but I don't think you'll reach 110 inches. It would be insane if you guys got that much snow. ◆

PERFORMING ARTS

Edited by Alexandra Cavallo

DEEZ NUTS Those who find that The Nutcracker has become more of a holiday routine than a holiday tradition should gift themselves with a trip to The Slutcracker. Definitely not for kiddies, the eighth annual production is a saucy, irreverent burlesque parody of the beloved holiday ballet, complete with whips, bondage, booby tassels and, yes, plenty of festively packaged nuts. Featuring Tchaikovsky's original score recorded by Czech orchestra Filharmonie Brno over four days in its own Symphony Hall, The Slutcracker has become a new holiday tradition for those who tend to find themselves on the Naughty List. Jingle your bells at the Somerville Theatre through Dec. 31. / Alexandra Cavallo

HO HO HORROR For a lot of us, 'tis the season when one too many eggnogs and a few too many hours of family time make us want to throttle our nearest and dearest. So take a break from Yuletide cheer and spend a night with a murderous Santa impersonator in Silent Night, Deadly Night. The schlocky '80s horror flick follows a tormented teen who goes on a holiday murder spree dressed as a jolly old elf after his parents are killed and he spends some unpleasant Christmases in a scary orphanage. B-movie thrills are a gift that keeps on giving, and you're sure to find a new appreciation of your family when the movie screens as part of the After Midnite series at the Coolidge Corner Theatre on Dec. 12. Alexandra Cavallo PHOTO: PHOTOFEST

Bridge of Spies ★★★ A handsome dramatization of real events that took place during the late '50s and early '60s, Steven Spielberg's latest finds him returning to the talents of one of his (and America's) favorite leading men, Tom Hanks. For their fourth collaboration, Hanks slips comfortably back into Jimmy Stewart's old shoes as modern cinema's everyman. He's Cold War hero James B. Donovan, who's tapped as the defense attorney for accused spy Rudolf Ivanovich Abel (Mark Rylance), a British-born Soviet arrested in Brooklyn during the film's masterful, wordless prologue. "Everyone will hate me," says Donovan, who realizes what will happen to his reputation when he defends one of the most hated men in the country, "but at least I'll lose." Much of the understated humor—from the snappy patter to the enjoyably eccentric characters Donovan encounters once he's recruited by the CIA to arrange a spy exchange that drives the second half—comes from a script credited to the Coen brothers and Matt Charman. Still, it's Spielberg's earnestness and faith in our democracy that shows through. It may be set during the height of the Cold War, but the movie's subtext is progressively modern; freedom isn't truly free if you value national security and state secrets over our Constitution. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Brooklyn ★★★1/2 This disarming romantic drama from director John Crowley (Boy A) benefits just as much from a starmaking performance by Saoirse Ronan (The Lovely Bones) as it does from a script by novelist Nick Hornby, who's built a solid second career adapting other people's works of fiction into films. In this case, Hornby has condensed Colm Tóibín's Brooklyn, a best-seller about a young Irish immigrant who leaves her small town when an Irish priest in Brooklyn offers to sponsor a move to America, which promises a better future in the hard years after World War II. Eilis Lacey (Ronan) doesn't want to leave her mother and sister behind, but job prospects are slim, so she boards a boat and settles into a job at a Brooklyn department store. Her profound homesickness is eased when she meets Tony (The Place Beyond the Pines' Emory Cohen), an Italian-American plumber who falls hard for her, even if she's not a Dodgers fan. But Eilis' new life is threatened when her sponsoring priest (Jim Broadbent) arrives with devastating news from home. Hornby compresses a bit too much into the third act, but Ronan eases any missteps with her luminous presence. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Creed ★★★★ Ryan Coogler's cinematic underdog is both a series rebirth and the seventh installment in the Rocky franchise that began with John G. Avildsen's Best Picture winner in 1976. If Creed hits audiences as hard as actor Michael B. Jordan's punches connect with his opponents onscreen, then this crowd-pleaser could collect its own Oscar gold come February. The 29-year-old Coogler follows through on the promise of his writing/directing debut, 2013's Fruitvale Station, which also starred Jordan. And even Raging Bull director Martin Scorsese might appreciate Coogler's staging of the first major fight sequence, which is captured in one seemingly unbroken shot as cinematographer Maryse Alberti expertly moves her steadicam through action that's been so well-choreographed and executed by Coogler that I quite literally had to catch my breath at scene's end. This kid's got talent. So does Adonis Johnson, illegitimate son of Apollo Creed, who leaves LA for Philadelphia, where he seeks out Rocky Balboa (Sylvester Stallone)—his father's best-known opponent, and later best friend—asking the former champ to train him. No one here handles the punches better than Stallone, whose superb performance encompasses the pain of families lost and the transcendence of discovering kin you never knew were there. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Danish Girl ★★ Another award season means another "prestige" picture from Tom Hooper, the perennially overrated director of Les Misérables and The King's Speech, which inexplicably won him an Oscar five years ago. Hooper's greatest gift as a filmmaker is his tremendous knack for picking projects that attract the attention of Oscar voters, despite the fact that he remains completely out of his depth as a director. His latest film adapts a novel by David Ebershoff that hugely fictionalized the lives of Danish artists Gerda Wegener (Alicia Vikander) and her husband Einar Wegener (Oscar winner Eddie Redmayne)—who would become a transgender pioneer. Adopting the name Lili Elbe in 1920s Copenhagen, Einar would undergo an incredibly risky procedure: the world's first-ever gender reassignment surgery. Lighting-wise, cinematographer Danny Cohen crafts a handsome picture, but Hooper still has no idea where to place his camera or why, so even when he gets strong performances out of his leads (as he does here), he does them no favors with his continued lack of a basic grasp of storytelling. Some of the gaps are filled in by a dreamily evocative score by Alexandre Desplat, but Hooper is destined to always remain Hooper, even with that Oscar. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

The Good Dinosaur ★★1/2 Leave it to the good folks at Pixar Animation Studios to create a dialogue-free short film just in time for the holidays that bucks the current wave of xenophobia by celebrating the non-Christian faith of a brown-skinned father and son. Director Sanjay Patel's Sanjay's Super Team is a semi-autobiographical tale of an Indian boy who daydreams that his family's Hindu gods are superheroes. Alas, after this brief bit of whimsy ends, the animated feature begins, and it's sadly not up to the Pixar pedigree. Many hands worked on this oft-delayed movie as production stretched across six years. When he couldn't crack the third act, original director Bob

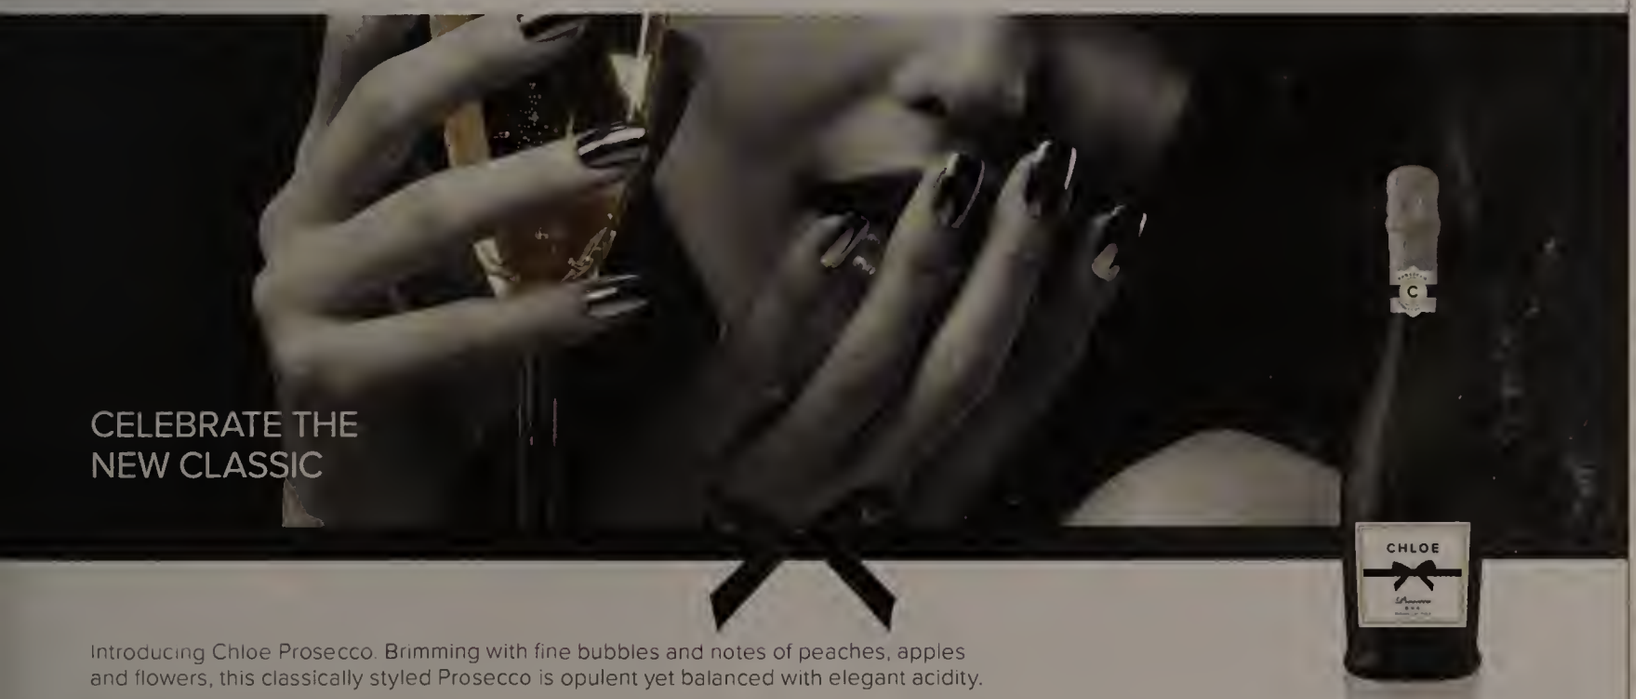
Peterson was removed in 2013; Peter Sohn was named the new director a year ago. Nevertheless, the pieces still didn't come together. Considering how convoluted the film's backstory is, The Good Dinosaur's plot is distressingly simple, especially after the sophistication of Pixar's most recent triumph, Inside Out. Essentially a Western, with Winsor McCay-style dinosaurs filling the roles of ranchers, the real star of this film is nature—and Pixar knows it, offering gloriously tranquil glimpses of the foliage, mountain ranges and rivers under the end credits. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)



The Hunger Games: Mockingjay – Part 2 ★★1/2 The Hunger Games conclude with a whimper as Jennifer Lawrence's Katniss Everdeen, the reluctant leader of the rebellion against the Capitol and its dastardly leader President Snow (Donald Sutherland), regains her voice after being brutally choked by Peeta Mellark (Josh Hutcherson) at the end of Mockingjay – Part 1. She still loves him though, and she kinda loves Gale Hawthorne too, I guess, but there's so little heat in this triangle that it feels tragically square. Made by music-video veteran Francis Lawrence, who's directed all but the first film in this series based on Suzanne Collins' trilogy of young adult novels, this final installment brings back Effie Trinket (Elizabeth Banks), Caesar Flickerman (Stanley Tucci), Haymitch Abernathy (Woody Harrelson) and Plutarch Heavensbee (the late Philip Seymour Hoffman, in his final, incomplete performance). I admit to being amazed that most of these talents signed on for this nonsense. (Gotta pay the bills somehow!) Still, these films are marginally better than their Twilight counterparts. In short, Hunger Games fans will likely be satisfied with this final meal, while the rest of us will feel pretty famished. Pass the popcorn! (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Martian ★★★★ Raise your hand if you've heard this one before: Matt Damon plays an astronaut who's stranded alone on an inhospitable planet, and he's willing to do just about anything to get back home to Earth. OK, put your hand down, because The Martian isn't Interstellar. It's better. In Ridley Scott's realistically science-minded triumph, the charming actor plays Mark Watney, who's abandoned and left for dead during a mission on Mars. A splendid adaptation of Andy Weir's speculative-fiction novel, this 3-D marvel focuses on Mark's efforts to stay alive. It will take four years for a rescue mission to reach him, and even with rationing, his food supply will only last a year. "Luckily, I'm a botanist," Mark says during one of his many video log entries, a device that allows the innately likable Damon to address the audience directly through much of the film; we believe in Mark as he concludes, "I'm gonna have to science the shit out of this." Does he ever. But rather than play things for suspense, as Alfonso Cuarón did in 2013's Gravity, the 77-year-old Scott presents his picture as a paean to the enduring spirit of man's ingenuity against overwhelming odds. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Peanuts Movie ★★1/2 The late Charles M. Schulz's beloved comic strip is brought into the digital age in the Peanuts gang's big-screen, 3-D, computer-animated debut, directed by Steve Martino (Ice Age: Continental Drift). All of your favorites are here, from Charlie Brown to his faithful dog Snoopy, as are tropes from the countless animated TV specials that were produced from 1965 onward. Snoopy is still battling imaginary nemesis the Red Baron, Lucy is still doling out five-cent psychiatric advice and Charlie still pines for the Little Red-Haired Girl. Fact is, the film's biggest flaw is overfamiliarity. The Schulz estate would only allow this movie to be made if it fit the spirit of the existing property. Hence, it's been produced by Charles' son Craig and grandson Bryan, who also wrote the script along with Cornelius Uliano; the three have packed in so many callbacks that you very quickly come to miss the iconic jazz music Vince Guaraldi composed for 18 Peanuts TV specials, which has been mostly replaced with Christophe Beck's modern, sentimental sludge. Not to mention, there's just something off about the gang's digital hair (Linus' follicles will haunt my dreams). Your kids may love this new take, but it sure ain't Pixar. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Spectre ★ The problem with Daniel Craig's James Bond is that his first outing as the British superspy, 2006's Casino Royale, was just too damn good. It reinvented the secret agent with the license to kill as an aggressive bulldog, downplaying the more suave aspects of the character while adding parkour, brutal hand-to-hand combat and an energy that was clearly a direct response to the Jason Bourne series. This was a new Bond, a guy you'd want to have a beer with, never mind a martini. Sadly, in the three films since, Bond's producers have bent over backward trying to return him to the man he was, straining to connect all of Craig's adventures into one big, ridiculously convoluted narrative, serializing his stories like an ongoing cable TV drama while making Bond progressively dour. Craig clearly isn't having much fun in this latest outing, and I don't blame him, since returning director Sam Mendes, hot off of 2012's Skyfall—the most successful Bond film ever, financially if not creatively—is determined to also make the longest Bond picture. On this count, he's succeeded. It's no wonder Craig looks bored; I was checking my watch too, since the 148-minute running time feels infinitely longer. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

SPOTLIGHT ★★★★ Tom McCarthy's taut, superb drama illuminates the people who make the fading institution of print journalism great. In 2003, The Boston Globe's Spotlight Team won a Pulitzer Prize for its comprehensive coverage of the Roman Catholic Church's sexual-abuse scandal, a painful situation all too familiar to Bostonians who followed the four-person unit's exhaustive yearlong reporting. McCarthy focuses on the compelling story behind the stories, shining a spotlight on the work done by Globe editor Walter "Robby" Robinson (Michael Keaton) and his team—Mike Rezendes (Mark Ruffalo), Sacha Pfeiffer (Rachel McAdams) and Matt Carroll (Brian d'Arcy James)—making what might just be the best film about investigative journalism since Alan J. Pakula's 1976 Oscar winner All the President's Men. Self-described outsider Marty Baron (Liev Schreiber), The Globe's quiet new editor, makes the Spotlight Team's story a priority on his first day on the job, prompting a common refrain he's met with throughout the film: "You want to sue the Church?!" After all, the paper has a lot to lose, since 53 percent of their readership is Catholic. In the end, not even The Globe itself is free from criticism, demonstrating a key quality that McCarthy shares with his subject: integrity. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

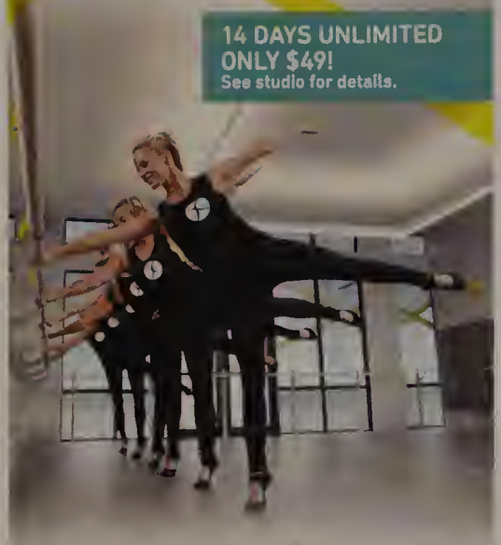
Trumbo ★★★ Director Jay Roach may be best known for the broad comedy of his Austin Powers and Meet the Parents/Fockers feature films, but his latest is closer in tone and spirit to his HBO historical drama, Recount, which chronicled the turmoil in Florida immediately after the 2000 presidential election. No less political, Trumbo is another true-life tale, this one beginning in 1947, a biographical portrait of the top screenwriter of the time. As detailed in John McNamara's script (based on the book by Bruce Cook), Dalton Trumbo (a fine Bryan Cranston) enjoyed writing in his bathtub, while soaking in both water and an ever-present glass of Scotch. Alas, Trumbo and colleagues like Arlen Hird (Louis C.K.) became targets of a witch hunt led by a House subcommittee and fueled by gossip columnists like Hedda Hopper (Helen Mirren), who branded him a "swimming pool Soviet" for belonging to the Communist Party. Jailed for his political beliefs, Trumbo would nevertheless go on to win two Academy Awards—without receiving credit, since he'd been blacklisted, unable to use his own name. But he never stopped fighting, standing up to "patriots" like John Wayne (David James Elliott) as he battled the absurdity of this injustice. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)



Youth ★★★1/2 This latest triumph from Paolo Sorrentino is a sumptuous showcase for Michael Caine and Harvey Keitel, who hasn't had a role this meaty and pleasurable to watch in decades. Famed composer Fred Ballinger (Caine) and lifelong friend Mick Boyle (Keitel), a veteran filmmaker who's workshopping what's likely his final "testament" with a younger team of screenwriters, are enjoying an extended stay at a spa in the Swiss Alps. Alas, the idyllic spell briefly breaks for Fred when an emissary of Queen Elizabeth (Alex Macqueen) comes calling the "maestro" out of retirement, begging him to perform at Prince Philip's birthday gala. Although Fred rebuffs the queen on the grounds that he's retired, this doesn't stop the 80-year-old from sitting alone in the countryside, composing an imagined symphony of sounds produced by local nature: mooing bovines, ringing cowbells and birds flapping their wings as wind blows through the treetops. This is but one bit of magic in this whimsical look at a friendship that's outlasted the marriage of Fred's daughter and personal assistant (Rachel Weisz) to Mick's cad of a son (Ed Stoppard), and while not quite at the level of Sorrentino's Oscar winner, The Great Beauty, Youth is still a spa for your senses. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

COUNTRY TIME Even before releasing their debut album, the members of "new wave" country quintet Old Dominion were already old hands. Frontman Matthew Ramsey and his four bandmates all had major careers penning hits for household names like Dierks Bentley, Blake Shelton and Keith Urban before coming together to record Meat and Candy. That album is already topping country charts with its decidedly different take on the genre, melding pop, rock and even reggae with more familiar country territory—drawled lyrical odes to beer cans and summertime love. Catch the boys, frequent touring partners with megastar Kenny Chesney, on Dec. 17 when the strike out on their own at Royale. Sarah Hagman

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

TAKE YOUR PICK Stan Munro sampled many careers, from true-crime writer to hospital administrator to TV reporter—but his true passion, inspired by a fifth-grade art project, is toothpicks. After selling his first Toothpick City to Spain's House of Katmandu in 2006, Munro made miniature woodworking his career. A visit to his Toothpick World is like a compact backpacking trip, with monuments like the Statue of Liberty, the Arc de Triomphe and the Pantheon shrunk to a 1:164 scale. Constructed entirely of Elmer's glue and toothpicks, which he has delivered to his studio by the truckload, the exhibit is on display at Brockton's Fuller Craft Museum beginning Dec. 19. *Erin E. NEIN LIVES

Eric Jarosinski sees two problems with the world today. One: the world. Two: today. (And "three if you count tomorrow.") That's just one of the succinct maxims that the former German lit professor and self-proclaimed #FailedIntellectual presents in Nein. A Manifesto, a collection of four-line aphorisms that put a dark, satirical spin on philosophers' musings. An extension of his popular Twitter persona @NeinQuarterly, loosely based on the cynical yet sensitive Theodor Adorno, the book also contains wisdom on life, death and social media. Join the man of very few words on Dec. 10 when he visits Harvard Book Store. / Carly Olson

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Street is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or meeting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 playlist, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 Tremont Street, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

Beer Specialty

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Something's always brewing at Best of Boston's award winning beer bar. THE JOYS OF PARENTHOOD

There's something perversely gratifying about sipping cocktails at the Boston Children's Museum, and that was only one of the many things that made its black-tie Wonder Ball simply wunderbar.

Another was the crowd, a blindingly beautiful assortment that included the likes of the incandescent Julie Hume Gordon and her devilishly handsome husband, Philip, gorgeous blond global health do-gooder Vanessa Kerry and her brain surgeon husband, Brian Nahed, hedge fund hottie Cate Faddis and her main squeeze, Dave, London-bred beauty Aisha Al Riyami, news anchor studmuffin David Wade and the flawless Francy, the soignée Carola Cadley, brunette bombshell Jodi Hess, goddess of all things Jody Adams, head honcha Carole Charnow, the high priestess of preservation, Barbara Erickson, and her handsome other half, Peter Torrebiarte, and a boatload of equally bodacious others.

The guests wandered among the museum's three floors, grazing on delicious nibbles from some of the city's top restaurants, and the evening raised beaucoup dinero for the initiative to increase access for disadvantaged and disabled kids.

"I really hope they doused this place with Purell," joked one woman. However, the funniest comment came from the young father who said, "Have you ever been here on a Saturday afternoon? It's the world's biggest argument for a vasectomy."

PAGING MR. ED

It was a high-octane crowd that turned out for Horsing Around at the Ritz, a fundraiser for therapeutic horseback riding programs at the Bina Farm Center. Held at the Ritz-Carlton, the super-swanky affair attracted the likes of cofounders Coryn and Babak Bina and Terry Snow, Hollywood scion Dante Stallone, celebrated cinematographer Terrence Hayes, alternative energy guru Jim Gordon and his daughter, Grace, animal activist Amber D'Amelio and her other half, Michael, babe-a-licious blonde Shannon Pastuszak and Richard Gere lookalike Alex Vlachos, a whole gaggle of Krupps, including Harris and Paul and Judi and Douglas, the achingly lovely Jill Krupp de Uribe and her main man, Juan, yummy mummy Liz Fish, XV Beacon chatelaine Amy Finsilver, the ever-delightful Allyce Najimy, casting agent extraordinaire Angela Peri and wedding officiant to the stars Leslie Zises, to name a mere handful.

Champagne and cocktails fueled the bidding in the silent auction, after which everyone was ushered into the ballroom for a sumptuous dinner. Overheard by the bar: "You look so dewy and well-hydrated," to which the response was "I guess vodka becomes me."

However, the evening's best comment came from the person who quipped, "I think it's wonderful that kids in wheelchairs can ride horses. If I even tried to get onto a horse, I'd end up in a wheelchair."

SOULFUL CYCLING

Riding a bike from one end of Massachusetts to the other is exhausting, but so is toasting the riders who do the Pan-Mass Challenge to raise money for the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. Those people know how to party.

The annual Check Presentation, held at the Black Falcon Terminal, attracted a fit and fabulous crew that boasted the likes of founder Billy Starr and his sparkling wife, Meredith, overgrown kid David Fialkow (who vowed to raise a million bucks when he became the organization's board chair, and did), his flawless other half, Nina, WBZ babe Lisa Hughes and her debonair lens man, Mike Casey, brunette babe Dana Smith and the dashing Rob, Bain bigwig Josh Bekenstein and the lovely Anita, 36-year rider Barry Kraft, blond beauties Erin Langton and Alyssa Kaitz, and so on and so forth.

Guests noshed, nibbled and sipped in between shaking their groove things, but the evening's highlight was when a platoon of bagpipers announced the presentation of this year's check: a cool $45 million, which means the PMC has raised half a billion dollars. Memo to cancer: You don't stand a chance. ◆

SWEET '16

OVER THE SUMMER I READ an article in The Atlantic by a writer who spent a year on the Norwegian island of Tromsø, more than 200 miles north of the Arctic Circle. Months go by without a sunrise, but its residents experience less seasonal depression than you might expect—because, it seems, they truly value the unique experiences winter has to offer. So, with the memory of last season's 110 inches of snow fresh in our memories, we decided to take a page from Tromsø and create a winter survival guide crammed with ideas for making the most of the months ahead. Whether you prefer hot toddies or winter beers, lounging by the fireplace or getting your blood pumping outdoors (snowshoe yoga, anyone?), we've got you covered.

Elsewhere, the staff takes a look ahead into 2016, exploring some of the new developments set to shake up the local cultural scene, from an ARTfarm sprouting up in Somerville to the city of Boston's first artist-in-residence program. Meanwhile, Paul Robicheau takes a look back at 2015, rounding up his top albums and songs of the year. And Jonathan Soroff catches up with our cover subject, Lisa Edelstein, who discusses her fascinating career—if you only know her from House or her current starring role on Bravo's Girlfriends' Guide to Divorce, the interview is well worth a read. When asked if she'd describe herself as "fearless," she had this to say: "Oh God, no. I've got tons of limitations, and I want them gone." That sounds like a pretty good resolution in my book. Happy New Year.

KING OF THE COLD

THE MYSTERY MAN BEHIND THE BOSTON YETI

SNOW JOKE: John Campopiano started the Boston Yeti as a lark, but soon saw it go viral.

MEET THE YETI ...

THE WINTER OF 2015 WAS FIT FOR neither man nor beast. It was, however, fit for man disguised as a beast: The Boston Yeti, a furry ambassador of fun who garnered international attention during a record-breaking season. Now, after spending nearly a year batting away media requests to reveal his true self, the man behind the beast has decided to shed his mask for The Improper and share his identity: John Campopiano, a 30-year-old archivist who lives in Somerville.

"The motivation for wanting to come forward is wanting to put my own stamp on it and feeling a little protective of it. I see people getting drunk at Bruins games in Yeti costumes and local car companies using the Yeti image in ads," Campopiano says. "If that continues—fine. But at least I can assume some kind of ownership of it. ... Just because I'm coming forward doesn't mean he goes away."

Campopiano, who loved Bigfoot and UFO stories as a kid, initially bought the suit as a Halloween costume in 2014. When the first monster storm of the season approached on Jan. 26, he decided to don the costume again and roam the streets. After seeing an NECN request for viewers' wintry photos, he asked his girlfriend (now the soon-to-be Mrs. Yeti) to take some shots. Then he set up an email address, claimed a Twitter account and waited.

"In a matter of minutes, people were picking it up. It was surreal," Campopiano recalls. "The rest of that night, I just sort of sat and watched Twitter."

Within hours, he was fielding a request from Good Morning America. He shared headline space with Tom Brady in The Guardian. Childhood idol Pee-Wee Herman tweeted at him. His girlfriend's family in Germany saw it in their local paper. There were radio requests from places as far as Japan. The Today Show asked to come to his house.

"It was a perfect storm, no pun intended, of people being tired of the doom-and-gloom news," he says. "It was an opportunity to be lighthearted and fun."

A couple of family members who guessed the Yeti's true identity were sworn to secrecy, but the digital records manager and archivist for WGBH-TV's Frontline was compelled to disclose his secret at work after WGBH's Greater Boston requested an interview. He opted only for online correspondence, declining radio and TV interviews and commercial opportunities.

"I wanted to keep the identity of the Yeti a secret, and I didn't want people to know that it's male or female," Campopiano says, though he relished the chance to create a character from scratch, declaring the Yeti a vegan, for example.

But Campopiano considered hanging up the costume in February, when a close friend unexpectedly died. He wondered if it was distasteful to be cavorting through town. "The last thing I wanted to do was run around and be jolly. I was grieving," he says.

"I wanted to keep the identity of the Yeti a secret, and I didn't want people to know that it's male or female."

"Then I thought: No, I'll use this as a way to grieve because it's bringing people joy and it brings me joy. It felt like I really needed to keep this going because it was keeping me going in a way."

In March, Campopiano, a self-proclaimed cat fanatic, teamed up with the MSPCA for a fundraiser that used the sale of Yeti merchandise to raise $2,000 for neglected animals. "I liked, conceptually, the idea of a big furry guy raising money for little furry friends," he says. And that month also saw his favorite Yeti moment: Shooting a video with Mayor Marty Walsh. "I said, wouldn't it be funny if I took the nameplate and wrote 'Boston Yeti Mayor' on it. And then I kicked up my feet on the desk," he recalls. "I was thinking, 'This is just unbelievable that this is happening.' That had to be the highlight."

Campopiano is still mulling what the future holds for the Boston Yeti. The first step, he jokes, is dry cleaning the costume: "I thought about having it dry cleaned, but then I thought, no, there might be too many questions. ... That's why I'm [going public]. So I can get it dry cleaned." While he doesn't expect to recreate the magic of last season, he is looking forward to that first snowstorm. "It's funny talking to people as you get closer to winter. They say, 'Oh God, last winter was so bad.' And I have a totally different view," he says. "I loved it. I loved that I could give people in the city a fun outlet. It was a blast." / Matt Martinelli

FETE THE FETA: The Pelekasis menu will tap into chef Brendan Pelley's Greek heritage

GREEK GOODS

MEDITERRANEAN CUISINE POPS UP NEXT AT WINK & NOD.

Pelekasis at Wink & Nod
3 Appleton St., Boston
(617-482-0117)
pelekosisboston.com

BRENDAN PELLEY HAD BEEN THINKING about opening his own restaurant for years. But the jump from executive chef of a farm-to-table charcuterie-focused restaurant in the 'burbs (Zebra's Bistro in Medfield) to chef/owner of a modern Greek restaurant in the city meant putting everything at financial risk. Enter Boston Nightlife Ventures' Wink & Nod in the South End, where Pelley will run his Pelekasis pop-up for at least six months starting Jan. 5.

"All of the routes to restaurant ownership are terrifying. So I was looking for the softest route to get my project out there, generate some interest, create a little buzz and cook good food in the city," Pelley says. "I'm friends with Josh Lewin, who was here with Bread & Salt. I reached out to him to see if he knew what the deal here was. He put me in touch with BNV, and I did a tasting and presented the concept."

Following Whisk, Bread & Salt and the current tenant, Patrick Enage's Akinto, Pelekasis will be the fourth pop-up at Wink & Nod, which maintains its cocktail program and swank interiors while new chefs test out their fare. For inspiration, Pelley is drawing on a lifetime of eating Greek food (his grandfather changed the family name from Pelekasis to Pelley), as well as a fall trek to Greece. "What was interesting to me was that when I was eating in the countryside tavernas, the food was more similar to rustic French and Italian food than what most of us think of as Greek-American food," Pelley says. "It was a lot of slow-braised dishes and stews and casseroles. I saw lots of farmstead cheeses and curing meats."

Pelley's menu is split into small, medium and large plates, emulating the shareable format that's been successful for Akinto. Highlights include the wild boar keftedes, a riff on classic Greek meatballs served with yogurt, chili-spiked honey and coriander, as well as dolmades stuffed with rice, golden raisins, pine nuts and a slab of foie gras. Pelley is using his mom's recipe for his spanakopita: nearly 100 layers of phyllo, feta and spinach, cut into slices and seared in butter. There will also be a slow-roasted leg of lamb for four to six people, served bone-in and carved tableside. "As long as it tastes amazing and it's some semblance of Greek, then I'm happy," Pelley says.

The Greek influence will seep into cocktails featuring ouzo, tsipouro and metaxa, and the plan is to add some Mediterranean wines to the list. But Wink & Nod won't stray far from what customers have come to expect from the bar. Pelley's challenge is living up to what they've come to expect from previous pop-ups. "It's tough coming in with a brand-new concept. We don't want to piss anyone off. People love [Enage's] food," he says. "But this is a great concept."

Good Eats: Pepe's Pep

At last, Frank Pepe, the legendary Connecticut-based pizzeria whose chewy-crisp, blistered, coal-fired thin crust practically defines the New Haven-style pie, has crossed the border into Massachusetts and strategically opened its doors in the Shops at Chestnut Hill amid throngs of college students and shoppers. The company's eighth outpost—one of potentially dozens that will dot the Northeast in coming years—is a close replica of the Wooster Street original, down to the booth decor, fresh-shucked clam topping and killer Foxon Park cola. The biggest difference? You can shop while you wait for a table or takeout. / Elizabeth Bomze

Purveyors: Sparkling Personality

Esmeralda Lambert had a plan: She was going to get her MBA at Babson College and bring a winning business idea back to her native Dominican Republic. But after meeting her future husband, Matt, at school, she decided to stay put—and ended up bringing some of the DR to Boston. "Everyone in the U.S. asked me, 'Where did you get that?' " Lambert says, recalling how her signature bling, made by artisans back home, had long earned compliments. "Once a woman literally wanted me to sell her the necklace I was wearing." So she founded her namesake line of lightweight, light-catching statement jewelry, hand-woven by entrepreneurial women and studded with Swarovski crystals, semi-precious stones and silver and gold findings. Tapping Matt as the brand's marketing strategist and her mom as her DR liaison, she soon had her line in 30 boutiques.

Now, she has one of her own: the recently opened Esmeralda, a bright boîte in Harvard Square filled with finds from her line and other small accessory brands, including seaglass jewelry by North Carolina's Austin Design, Nepalese roll-on bracelets from Aid Through Trade and delicate gold and silver necklaces by Beverly Hills husband-and-wife duo Charlene K. It's also filled with Latin music and the scent of rose candles and Dominican coffee. "If you come, I want you to enjoy your time in the store," she says. "I want you to feel at home." / Jacqueline Houton

COPPERSMITH CIDER PUNCH

PRICE: $12

INGREDIENTS: Angel's Envy Kentucky bourbon, Ancho Reyes chili liqueur, lemon juice, bitters and apple cider, topped with cava

TASTE: A classic marriage of refreshing cider and port cask-finished bourbon. There's sweet from the cinnamon-sugar rim, heat from the chili liqueur. It goes down easy. Really easy.

APPEALS TO: Pretty much anyone. "I've talked people into it who drink Cosmos," says bar manager Courtney Nunheimer.

COPPERSMITH
40 W. 3rd St., Boston
(617-658-3452)
coppersmithboston.com

PAIR IT WITH: Bombolini ($6), the brunch menu's cinnamon-sugar donuts served with vanilla crème. Or chef Chris Henry recommends the roasted bone-in pork chop ($22) with apples, heirloom carrots and cider glaze.

ANOTHER SEASONAL OPTION: Nunheimer decided to forgo the ubiquitous espresso martini for an iced hot chocolate option ($11), featuring Tito's vodka, creme de cocoa and Baileys, with a crushed-peppermint rim.

THE REST OF THE MENU: Nunheimer had the neighborhood in mind. "The Southie community, they like what they like." But she also wanted to introduce some new things. "We walk that line of craft and what's known."

THE DIGS: Thirty-four seats line the massive 138-foot reclaimed wood bar, and Nunheimer has her own walkup library of booze, stretching up to the soaring ceiling and bringing 99 bottles of beer on the wall to a whole new level.

KEEP ON TRUCKIN': Coppersmith's dueling food trucks have been squaring off on football gamedays—and there could be cocktail competitions on the way. / Saroh Hogmon

Q&A

RÖHM TO GROW

JOYS OF BOSTON. Elisabeth Röhm was [illegible]

Law & Order fans might know Elisabeth Röhm best from her four years playing hard-nosed district attorney Serena Southerlyn on the popular crime show, but the actress has recently come into her own on the big screen, appearing alongside Jennifer Lawrence in 2013's award-winning American Hustle and again in the forthcoming film Joy Before Joy's Dec 25 release, we got Röhm on the line to talk about the film and her experiences while working in Boston. / Alexandra Cavallo

YOU LIVED IN BOSTON WHILE FILMING AMERICAN HUSTLE AND JOY... Yes, and we seem to have these epic experiences when we're in town I didn't know Boston that well, but I got to know it very intimately, because when we were there filming American Hustle the bombings happened, and we were also there during the snowstorm last year, the highest snow you guys have experienced, right? [Laughs.] I just remember seeing all the residents digging their cars out and thinking to myself, "You are so lucky that a van comes and picks you up," because that daily experience I saw outside my window...I lived in the North End. I mean, yes, there's a magic and a beauty and I was so excited to be in snow, and my 7-year-old daughter loved it, but these cars were buried up to the roof So, I've gotten to know Boston pretty intimately, having been there through some challenging times.

TELL US A LITTLE BIT ABOUT YOUR ROLE IN JOY. I play Jennifer Lawrence's—Joy's—sister Peggy. I'm sort of a stepchild, but we grew up together. There's a feeling of sibling rivalry and competition, but there's also love and complicated things. It's like any stepsister relationship where there's one child who is the beloved and the stepchild kind of feels like a second-class citizen, you know? That informs a lot of how Peggy views the world, so I think in many ways she's an obstacle for Joy.

THIS IS YOUR SECOND TIME WORKING WITH DAVID O. RUSSELL... Yes, and my second time working with Jennifer Lawrence and Robert De Niro and Bradley Cooper, so it feels like being with a family It's such an incredible blessing.

DOES WORKING AGAIN WITH THE SAME ACTORS AND DIRECTOR FOSTER A BETTER CREATIVE ENERGY? I don t know if you would distinctly say it's better I think it was sort of automatic, at least for me. Starting from the very beginning we had a shorthand to communicating with each other that felt like we had known each other forever, and that informed the work and the ability to [illegible] each other and know what the other person [illegible] because ultimately David is a genius, and we're [illegible] canvas We express his vision of the story And I would say that happened instantly

ANY FUNNY ON-SET STORIES, SINCE YOU'RE ALL SO CLOSE? Well, David is an extremely funny person. He's got an incredible sense of humor, and there was a lot of joy on-set There was a great relationship between David and Jennifer, so they really set the tone. I don't know how she pulls it off, but she is just the most grounded person. She's full of love, totally honest—in her work and in person We spent a lot of time together on both films, and I just really admire her, how, at 25—and I'm 42—she's so able to access her truest, sweetest, deepest, most complex self to play these characters.

YOU'VE WORKED WITH SOME VERY TALENTED ACTORS. ANY DREAM PEOPLE YOU'D LOVE TO WORK WITH? Eddie Redmayne lately has just been blowing my mind, and I would love to work with him The Danish Girl is just a beautiful movie, and he's exquisite in it. He seems pretty spectacular lately

HOW ABOUT AN ACTOR FROM THE PAST, HAD YOU LIVED IN THEIR TIME? Oh, gosh. For some reason he just popped into my mind, but Raúl Julia! But I think there are so many people who have been inspiring to me, whether it's writers or directors or actors, music When you see someone expressing something that's emotional and real and you think, "Well that's how I feel." Or, at least, I'd like to work on myself to get to a place where I m in touch with how much that moved me and why it moved me, and then discover those things in yourself so that you can share them with others That s what art does it creates a connection between all of us

PET PEEVE

DEAR PET POLICE: I went into Barnes & Noble today with a 2 ½-pound guinea pig in a carrier after an appointment at Angell Animal Medical Center. I have been in and out with my animals for YEARS and no one has ever said anything. Today, I got pounced on by a security guard and told animals aren't allowed. This former library worker and longtime bibliophile is NOT happy. I don't exactly feel good about going anywhere near B&N anymore! I don't have a computer, so going online is not much of an option. My small animal is such a big threat.

DEAR CAR, TRUCK AND SUV DRIVERS: Just because I am agile, quick-witted and clearly able to crank the gas, it does not mean I want to deal with you tapping your brakes, stopping at a red light when you're going right, or riding my ass. To all the motorcycle riders out there, pay attention! We'd rather enjoy our ride!

TO THE OLD GUY WHO STOLE OUR SPOT AT THE BAR: Oh, you didn't see my wife waiting for those two barstools you just took, while I was ordering our drinks? How about when she told you she was waiting for the seats? Or how about when the guy who was getting up said we had been waiting for them? Hope you had someone "test" your drink before you sipped it.

THE GENIUS OF GENES

A LOCAL RESEARCHER TEAMS UP WITH DEEPAK CHOPRA TO OFFER A DYNAMIC VIEW OF DNA.

Super Genes* by Deepak Chopra, M.D., and Rudolph E. Tanzi, Ph.D.
Published by Harmony Books, 336 pages, $26

"IT'S IN MY GENES," PEOPLE SAY, TO HERALD their talents or declare that their shortcomings are set in stone. These famous scientists, Chopra, a pioneer in integrative medicine, and Tanzi, a Harvard neurology professor who conducts research on Alzheimer's at Mass. General, boldly declare otherwise, viewing genes as more fluidly responsive to experience—a concept called "epigenetics."

Some events may affect genes negatively; those of some Holocaust survivors with PTSD were also "traumatized" and seemingly passed on to children who hadn't lived through the experience. Ditto with some mice made fearful of a certain chemical whose offspring shuddered at that smell. Positive effects may be possible too; the authors propose that epigenetics could partly explain how Dutch men went from the shortest in Europe to the tallest in only two centuries. Gene mutations are not solely random, they suggest, and scientists are pursuing the significant twistings that may explain the link, say, between sleep and Alzheimer's.

Loaded with scientific information, research data and, yes, eager speculation, this book is also full of optimism about our ability to actually change gene expression through improved habits. The authors' program proposes a three-step pyramid of positive lifestyle changes, starting with the easiest choices and working up to harder and experimental ones. Covering the realms of diet, stress, exercise, meditation, sleep and emotions, they serve up menus of suggested interventions that span the mystical and the practical, allowing readers to pick and choose how to polish their actions and attitudes.

FROM PAGE 71: Beyond the amazing implications for the influence of thought directly on gene activities, this approach could someday be applied to help patients with epilepsy by instantaneously delivering drugs or switching certain genes on or off in sufferers via a brain implant at the very onset of a seizure. ◆

SATED IN SEATTLE

EAT AND DRINK YOUR WAY THROUGH THE CITY'S MANY GASTRONOMIC GEMS.

LIVELY, LITERATE AND LIBERAL-MINDED Seattle is also a great eating city: You may come for the coffee, but you'll stay for the biscuits and brandade de morue. Consider Pike Place Market, as much an emblem as the Space Needle and emphatically not a tourist trap. Locals shop here for a wide array of fruit, flowers and, of course, fresh fish. Take a moment to admire the arrangements of glistening seafood, luminescent on their beds of crushed ice, and don't miss the famous salmon-tossing shtick—it's hokey, but it's fun. Be sure to pick up some fresh fruit to bring back to your hotel and avoid mini-bar temptation; the local applcs are exceptional.

Across the street from the rambling market is a mother lode of food shops and eateries, including perennial favorite Piroshky Piroshky. There's no place to sit and almost always a line, but it's worth the wait for a handcrafted Russian pastry warm from the oven, be it an apricot turnover or a hand-held pie packed with bacon, hash browns, eggs and cheese. A few blocks away is the famed Fran's Chocolates, where confections are displayed in elegant rows under glass and complimentary samples wait on a silver platter. There are assorted truffles and chocolate-dipped fruit, but the salted caramel is the star. Gray salt caramels dipped in dark chocolate are sprinkled with sea salt from the Brittany coast; smoked salt caramels dipped in milk chocolate are finished with sea salt that's been smoked over Welsh oak. Either makes a compact souvenir that's a perfect "thank you" for your pet sitter.

In the same Pike Place neighborhood, Le Pichet is a bastion of rustic food and wine that's open from 8 am till midnight. This 32-seat gem offers an excellent selection of charcuterie, including house spice-brined beef tongue and Serrano ham from the Spanish Pyrenees, offered in open-faced tartines or plates stacked with up to eight selections. Non-carnivores will revel in the warm brandade de morue, served with crusty grilled bread and olives. As for main courses, the grass-fed steak frites is bested only by the pan-roasted local salmon fillet in a lovage broth dotted with crispy semolina dumplings. If dessert would send you over the top, enjoy the complimentary housemade butter caramels presented with the check. And because this is Seattle, you can always grab a coffee to go.

Unless you time it just right, you'll be taking your order to go at Biscuit Bitch at Caffe Lieto. Tiny and cheerfully frenetic, this "trailer park to table" spot specializes in huge, fluffy, flavorful biscuits with sausage gravy (or a gluten-free, vegetarian shiitake mushroom gravy) and "fixin's." Replete with bitchy badinage ("It's your choice, bitch!"), the menu offers options such as a Hot Mess Bitch that involves eggs, garlic grits, cheese, grilled Louisiana hot link and jalapeños. A limited number of gluten-free biscuits are baked each day, so celiac bitches can get in on the fun, too.

For post-prandial snoozing, there's the centrally located Fairmont Olympic, a historic 450-room hotel whose down pillows and duvets ensure luxuriously restful sleep. After a swim in the glassed-in rooftop pool or a run on the treadmill, you can indulge in a room-service breakfast poolside wearing a fluffy terry robe and slippers. And if you prefer to dine in the hotel one evening, the on-site Shuckers turns out a fine crab Louie salad, as well as an oyster-palooza of 13 kinds of oysters prepared nine different ways.

A 10-minute cab ride from the Fairmont is Capitol Hill, a densely populated area that's a center for the LGBTQ community. It's also home to Capitol Cider, a friendly tavern whose lower level boasts shuffleboard tables, a fireplace and a stage for live music. Upstairs the vibe is quieter, with dark paneling, cozy booths and a kitchen that's soy-, peanut- and gluten-free. Omnivores won't feel deprived, however, with dishes such as roasted cauliflower salad with dandelion greens, toasted hazelnuts and tart cherry vinaigrette or steak frites with charred broccoli and harissa butter. Everything is delicious, and the waiters are happy to offer guidance on the 20 rotating taps of specialty ciders.

If your schedule allows for a day trip, make your way to the waterfront and hop a ferry to Bainbridge Island, a scenic 35-minute ride away. Seven artisanal wineries, a brewery and an organic distillery are located here, along with eminently browsable galleries, stores and a small-but-special farmers market (kiwi berries, anyone?). Bainbridge Island Museum of Art, a LEED-certified, solar-paneled structure with a rooftop garden, is only a short stroll from the ferry. You won't find blockbuster exhibits; local and regional contemporary art fills the museum, which is less than three years old but garnering national recognition. After a visit, head to Mora Iced Creamery for superlative artisanal ice cream; flavors may include one of three (!) permutations of dulce de leche. Once you've indulged, take a quick $2 bus ride to the Bloedel Reserve, an entrancing 150-acre mix of woodland and landscaped gardens, including a Japanese garden and a reflecting pool—an ideal place to walk off some of a Seattle sojourn's well-earned calories. ◆

GREEK REVIVAL

DORETTA UPDATES TRADITIONAL GREEK CUISINE WITH PARK SQUARE PANACHE.

Upscale Greek cuisine is having a moment in Boston, currently drawing crowds at the Seaport's glitzy Committee and debuting imminently at two South End venues (Wink & Nod and Kava). But when Michael Schlow jumps into the fray, a moment can start to look like an Important Trend. Can a local celebrity chef finally make Bostonians ditch their notion of Greek fare as the province of no-frills neighborhood joints and gyros stands? Inspired by his wife Adrienne's Greek heritage, Schlow appears set on doing just that, replacing his long-running Via Matta with the new Doretta Taverna & Raw Bar.

Fans of Via Matta may gawp at the space's physical transformation: A big, foursquare bar now commands the center of a dimly lit dining room. Plain wooden tables, chairs and floors yield fashionably ear-splitting acoustics barely softened by perimeter leather banquettes. Adrienne Schlow's vivid paintings provide the few splashes of color and hints of modernity. In the old bar's space, a show kitchen tantalizingly displays whole fish and shellfish on ice, which makes it hard not to order a dozen local oysters ($19), pristine and sweet, or prettily fanned-out slices of raw yellowtail ($14) with a not-overbearing accent of crushed olives. This is high-quality raw bar at downtown prices.

That imposing, spacious bar seems built for grazing. How easy it is to make a meal of traditional Mediterranean spreads served with excellent pita, like roasted eggplant ($6) with walnuts and red pepper, runny whipped feta ($5) with pickled jalapeños for punch, and delectable fava bean hummus ($7) sprinkled with chewy apricots and giant pine nuts. These beautifully exemplify the virtues of the Greek kitchen: a few clear, simple flavors allowed to shine, brightened with great olive oil, lemon, salt and fresh herbs. Those same qualities make the village salad ($10 per person) nearly miraculous: simple cherry tomatoes (a wise winter choice), cucumbers, red onions and red-wine vinegar, lifted to wonderment by excellent briny olives, dreamy feta and fresh oregano, instantly banishing the memory of a thousand perfunctory, dreadful Greek salads.

Small plates mostly hit that traditional bull's-eye, as in grilled octopus ($16) with onions and capers, given a skillful one-two of grill-char and tenderness, and squares of flaky, oily-but-not-too-oily spinach pie ($9). Gigandes beans ($10) with kale and garlic are similarly earthy and satisfying, another brilliantly simple salad. The cumin accent and crisp panko coating on lamb meatballs ($12) might nonplus a traditionalist, but they benefit from properly gamy lamb flavor and good acid balance from tomato, yogurt and lemon zest. That acid balance goes sorely missing in certain dishes, like small warm shrimp ($13) showered in breadcrumbs and dill. (Ask for extra lemons; they help.) Breaking from the Greek tradition of overcooking vegetable sides works nicely with string beans ($8) but goes too raw in zucchini ($8) with tomatoes and black olives. Crispy zucchini chips ($12) get a brisk cucumber/yogurt dip but a limp fry job. Roasted peppers ($11) with capers and red onion hit their mark, thanks to terrific, fierce white anchovies.

After many small plates, entrees may seem superfluous, but it's worth finding room for lusciously fatty, meltingly tender 15-hour lamb shoulder ($28) with gigandes beans and kale, the pot roast of the Greek gods. A fillet of branzino ($34) is perfectly cooked with a side of grilled fennel but seems a bit meager for the price. Red snapper ($32) is a heftier, skin-on chunk of similarly beautiful, fresh fish, but arrives quite underdone. Chicken ($26) with lemon, garlic and herbs reflects more skillful technique, but repeat accompaniments of gigandes beans and kale can start to feel rote.

Desserts are mostly hits: Galaktoboureko ($10) is a lighter, airier, not-too-sweet version of the classic Greek pastry of semolina custard in phyllo, while chocolate cake ($10) with espresso ganache and fig jam is appropriately swoonily rich. Toasted almond cake ($10) is dry enough to require bites of its fine smoked-apple gelato.

As befits a taverna, Doretta's bar program is versatile and food-friendly, notably in a wine list dotted with lovely Greek wines by the glass ($9-$26), like the flinty-yet-fruity white 2014 Domaine Sigalas ($12) from Santorini, and the lush, tannic red 2010 Boutari from Naoussa ($14). Cocktails are witty yet not too challenging, as in the Sidecar variant that is The Crazy Way ($13) of brandy, cinnamony Rakomelo liqueur and blood orange, and the Tiki-ish flavors of the Santorini ($13) of dark rum, herb spirit, falernum and pineapple. A dozen beer bottles ($6-$19) lean global and crafty. Service is smooth and ingratiating, but needs to better coordinate sequencing with the kitchen at times to avoid a pileup of plates that can't fit at the table.

Ultimately, Doretta provides a useful reintroduction to the elemental pleasures of Greek cookery in an urbane if occasionally uneven package, its kitchen shining brightest in those smaller, more traditional plates. With any luck, Schlow and his emerging competition will finally convince Bostonians to give one of the world's great foundational cuisines the overdue respect it deserves. ◆

Q: WHAT ARE MY OPTIONS FOR GETTING RID OF THE LINES AROUND MY EYES?

A: Most of us will develop crow's feet: lines and wrinkles at the outside corners of our eyes. These lines are formed over time as a result of squinting our eyes.

There are three methods of reducing or eliminating these crow's feet. The skin around the eyes can be tightened using radio-frequency (RF) energy. By heating the collagen the skin contracts and the lines will be diminished.

Fractional laser is another option to treat the lines around your eyes. The energy from the fractional laser resurfaces the skin to reveal fresh, tighter skin underneath.

The third approach is to inject a botulinum product, such as Botox or Dysport around the crow's feet. This will relax the facial muscles causing the lines and temporarily smooth out that area.

Come in for a free consultation and our experts will help guide you to the best option for you!

REAWAKENING

THE FORCE IS STRONG WITH THIS ONE.

I REMEMBER MAY 1999 LIKE IT WAS YESTERDAY. It had been 16 long years since the release of Return of the Jedi, the final episode of George Lucas' original trilogy of Star Wars films, and I was still a little bit in shock that a new trilogy of prequels was happening. I couldn't have been more excited.

And then the film, Star Wars: Episode I – The Phantom Menace, opened, and my excitement turned into fear—fear that we still had two more of these prequels to come. For fans like me who'd grown up with Star Wars as a central part of their childhood, the movie was a disaster. Sure, I tried convincing myself that the movie had merit, but a plot involving intergalactic trade embargoes was akin to tuning into C-SPAN. And boy, was that tow-headed moppet who played Anakin Skywalker annoying. Sadly, he wasn't half as irritating as Jar Jar Binks, a computer-animated character that was Lucas' idea of kid-friendly comic relief, a despised creation that proved one of the filmmaker's worst ideas since he decided to have the Ewoks—an army of forest-dwelling teddy bears—help defeat the evil Galactic Empire back in 1983.

Truth be told, the prequels did improve, but the lack of compelling characters like the original trilogy's Luke Skywalker, Princess Leia, Han Solo and Chewbacca was a huge detriment. Worse, the CGI overkill that had crept into Lucas' special editions of the original films returned with a vengeance in the prequel trilogy, overshadowing any human drama.

So, imagine my trepidation when a new trilogy (Episodes VII-IX) was announced in 2012, alongside the news that Lucas had sold his production company, Lucasfilm, to Disney. If Lucas himself hadn't been able to recapture the magic of his original trilogy with his tedious prequels, think of the horrors that might await us at the hands of someone new, particularly if the person hired to steward the series was J.J. Abrams, who'd directed only one film that I enjoy.

Well, make that two. Turns out, it is possible to go home again.

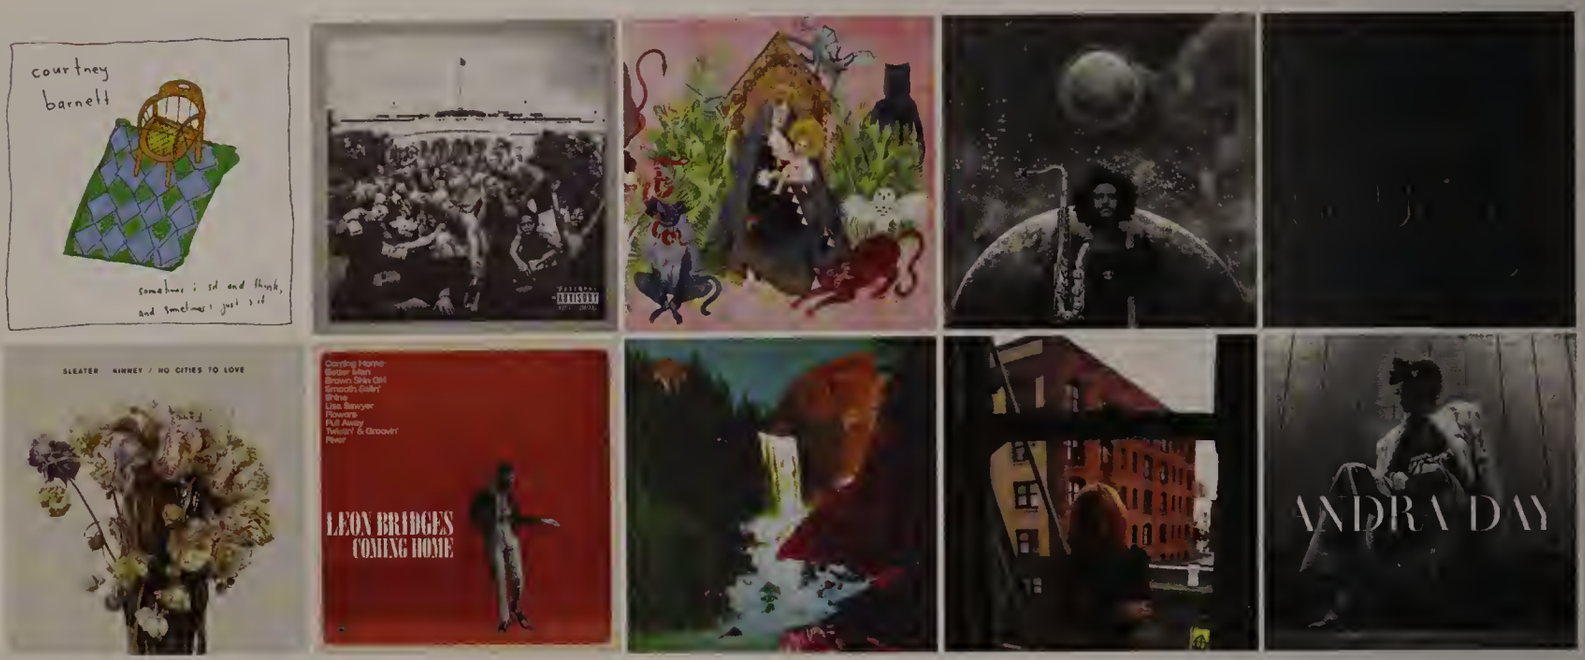
"Chewie, we're home," announces Harrison Ford, who's reprising one of his most iconic roles as Han Solo, everyone's favorite scoundrel and smuggler, as he enters both the movie and the Millennium Falcon, the space-faring freighter audiences last saw him piloting in the summer of '83. And when Chewbacca (once again played under mounds of yak hair by Peter Mayhew, even after twin knee replacements) growls in agreement, I can only wonder why Lucas hadn't returned to these terrific characters himself.

[Abrams] and co-scripter Lawrence Kasdan...have brought the gang back together in style.

Princess Leia is back, too. Still played by Carrie Fisher, Leia is a general now, heading up the "Resistance." It's been more than 30 years since the Rebel Alliance destroyed the second Death Star, and a new threat to the galaxy has risen from the ashes of the defeated Empire: The First Order. The next generation of white-armored Stormtroopers is commanded by General Hux (Ex Machina's Domhnall Gleeson) and his mysterious enforcer, Kylo Ren (Adam Driver of HBO's Girls), a black-clad, mask-wearing worshipper of Darth Vader, a young man who kneels before an altar containing the fallen Sith Lord's burnt helmet—when he's not throwing tantrums and cutting up everything in sight with his crimson-bladed "crossguard" lightsaber.

This follower of the Dark Side is apparently unaware that Vader returned to the Light, redeeming himself before dying in the arms of his son, Luke Skywalker, during the final act of Episode VI.

Speaking of Luke (Mark Hamill, who's now the same age that Sir Alec Guinness was when he portrayed Obi-Wan Kenobi in the '77 film), the last of the Jedi Knights is nowhere to be found at the start of Episode VII – The Force Awakens. The movie's traditional opening title crawl informs us that Leia is looking for her twin brother, and she's sent her best pilot, Poe Dameron (Oscar Isaac, another Ex Machina alum), on a mission to locate the missing Jedi.



It's here on the barren sands of the Tatooine-like planet Jakku that we eventually meet the rest of the film's refreshingly diverse new cast: Finn (Attack the Block's John Boyega), a Stormtrooper who flees the First Order when he develops a conscience; scavenger Rey (charismatic newcomer Daisy Ridley); and BB-8, a spherical orange-and-white droid who might be more adorable than the returning R2-D2.

Abrams successfully rebooted a stagnant science-fiction franchise with 2009's Star Trek, and now he's performed the same feat with Star Wars. He and co-scripter Lawrence Kasdan (a fan favorite writer on both Episode V – The Empire Strikes Back and Episode VI – Return of the Jedi) have brought the gang back together in style, and they're still backed by the music of 83-year-old composer John Williams, who, other than Anthony Daniels (who returns as C-3PO), is the only person to have worked on every episode.

While the picture takes time to realize its full potential, the final third is among the most emotionally satisfying acts of all seven films. I'd been bracing myself to make the easy joke and refer to this movie's director as "Jar Jar Abrams," when the real fool is me, a fan who lost faith along the way. Thankfully, the Force has finally reawakened. ◆

FIFTEEN FROM '15

MY TOP 10 ALBUMS AND 5 SONG PICKS FROM THE PAST YEAR.

ALBUMS OF THE YEAR

COURTNEY BARNETT, Sometimes I Sit and Think, and Sometimes I Just Sit (Mom + Pop). This Aussie upstart captures the dread and drollness of mundane life in clever, poignant lyrics that touch on house-hunting, ecology and insomnia over pliable garage-rock, a ready canvas for her delightfully accented drawl.

KENDRICK LAMAR, To Pimp a Butterfly (Aftermath/Interscope). The Compton kid achieves grand metamorphosis, rapping about fame, race, ego and insecurity, even conjuring a conversation with Tupac. Co-producer Flying Lotus taps George Clinton among varied guests as Lamar channels funk and jazz (much like D'Angelo did on his also-landmark Black Messiah) into a dense, scathing hip-hop cauldron.

FATHER JOHN MISTY, I Love You, Honeybear (Sub Pop). Josh Tillman blurs lines between his cynical persona and his real-life marriage in melodramatic songs that recall early Elton John tunes and prove both amusingly caustic and sweetly affecting.

KAMASI WASHINGTON, The Epic (Brainfeeder). Before working on Kendrick Lamar's Butterfly, this saxophonist/composer shared marathon sessions with fellow young tigers from LA to build a three-album opus that swirls from avant-garde big band (think Sun Ra, Coltrane) to smoother jazz, full-sized choir and Malcolm X tribute.

ALABAMA SHAKES, Sound & Color (ATO). A left turn that refracts the band's soulful roots-rock through funky, minimalist prisms, this album is a crystalline contrast to the Shakes' earth-moving shows, though it likewise hinges on Brittany Howard's galactic voice.

SLEATER-KINNEY, No Cities to Love (Sub Pop). After a nine-year hiatus, the great Northwest punk trio of Corin Tucker, Carrie Brownstein (coming from her comedy gig Portlandia) and Janet Weiss dig us out like they never left, mashing guitars and drum kit into pointed power plays that ring personal and political.

LEON BRIDGES, Coming Home (Columbia). There's nothing flashy about this young singer from Fort Worth, Texas. Yet with a hand from members of Austin rockers White Denim, Bridges has taken subtle, steady, '60s-style soul that evokes Sam Cooke, added hints of doo-wop and Texas swing, and refreshed it for a new generation.

MY MORNING JACKET, The Waterfall (Capitol). Jim James' falsetto-to-a-roar voice soars as the Kentucky-born rockers roll over the edge on their evocative seventh album, blending direct R&B/folk balladry with cascading prog-rock ambitions.

JESSICA PRATT, On Your Own Love Again (Drag City). Hushed, hypnotic folk-pop that's fit for overcast days comes from a Californian whose delicate vocals and shadowy fingerpicking echo another time and place. This album was recorded lo-fi at home and is more mysterious for it.

ANDRA DAY, Cheers to the Fall (Warner Bros.). This San Diego singer can evoke Amy Winehouse, but get past the eyeliner wings and do-rag; Day's voice projects brassy power closer to Mary J. Blige or Adele. Day co-wrote this retro-soul debut's songs about a failed relationship, and her boosters include co-producer Raphael Saadiq and Stevie Wonder, her duet partner in an Apple holiday ad. In fact, Day is ubiquitous with TV performances of "Rise Up," which she should do in 2016.

SONGS OF THE YEAR

"Call It Off," Shamir. This pulsing ode to self-empowerment comes from an androgynous Vegas singer who encourages you to ping-pong on the dance floor.

"Speed Trap Town," Jason Isbell. Here's another striking piece of songwriting from an alt-country singer whose stark, earthy details evoke Nebraska-era Springsteen.

"Can't Feel My Face," The Weeknd. Drug is the love this R&B star is thinking of in this sleek, Michael Jackson-catchy creation with busy co-producer Max Martin.

"Then Came the Morning," The Lone Bellow. Choral harmonies bring sunrise to the piano-based title track on the latest album by this Brooklyn country-gospel band.

"Fourth of July," Sufjan Stevens. A haunting account of the singer's last words with his dying mother, who left him as a child and simply imparts, "We're all gonna die." ◆

PRIX FIXED

WHY I'M GREEN-LIGHTING THE BOSTON GRAND PRIX.

In Comedians in Cars Getting Coffee, Jerry Seinfeld asks Bill Burr to explain Boston's general state of disgruntlement. "Boston is a great city," Seinfeld says. "What is the problem with these people? Where is this dark cloud from?" Burr doesn't have a good answer, but he knew exactly what Seinfeld was talking about: the Bostonian attitude of wary suspicion that lurks just beneath the surface—or right on it—during the simplest interactions. I think it has something to do with the fact that everyone's constantly trying to determine who's trying to screw them, and how to avoid said screwing. Simple friendliness or positivity arouses suspicion. You smiled at me? OK, Smiles, let's get to the point: What do you want? What's your endgame here?

Boston's adversarial ball-breaking tendencies manifest themselves most brightly whenever there's any kind of major project or event in the works. In retrospect it's amazing that the American Revolution started here: "Can't Philadelphia host the Battle of Lexington? My commute 'tis brutal enough as is." A significant portion of the city populace is still holed out down on the Cape, waiting for things to settle down after the commotion of the 2004 Democratic National Convention.

So it's probably not surprising that IndyCar, the organization behind the 2016 Boston Grand Prix, has run into a wee bit of resistance. Shutting down a couple of miles of streets, in a relatively quiet part of town, on Labor Day weekend—when everyone leaves anyway—ought to be straightforward, right? Of course not. One major case of obstructionism came from a Seaport condo association, which filed a lawsuit to stop the race from going past its building. In a quintessentially Boston situation, a Not in My Backyard lawsuit came from people who don't even have backyards.

The lawsuit was recently settled for undisclosed terms. Translation: The condo owners hated the idea of a race until some money made them feel a lot better about it. I wish I'd thought of that ploy when I lived in Southie. I mean, the St. Patrick's Day parade went right past my place. Once a year, I was inconvenienced by a public event. I should've complained or demanded compensation. But I didn't think to do that, because I'm not a huge downer, and also because my neighbors would've slashed my tires (even more frequently). Like they say, if you can't beat 'em, make margaritas on your front steps with a gas-powered blender at 8 am.

To anyone who's skeptical of the idea of hosting an open-wheel race, I'd challenge you to attend the Canadian Grand Prix in Montreal. It's so great. Montreal is a party anyway, but on race weekends the city steps it up to another level. One year I drove up in a purple Pontiac GTO that I was testing, and when I returned to the parking lot after the race, my windshield was adorned with the flier for a strip club. It featured the silhouette of a dude getting a lap dance and bore the words, "You are naked. She is naked." I noticed that not all of the cars had the flier. But clearly someone took a look around and said, "Purple Pontiac? Mais oui, this is a fellow who would patronize our business, perhaps multiple times on the same weekend."

Montreal also has Breathalyzers in fast-food restaurants and a casino that looks like a spaceship. In the battle of fun, our northern neighbor has some decided advantages. I mean, Quebec actually has a town named "St. Louis du Ha! Ha!" I say we fire back by hosting our own Grand Prix, followed by a rechristening of Charlestown to Chuckletown. I'm sorry, Chuckletown, but we cannot let Canada win.

If you can't beat 'em, make margaritas on your front steps with a gas-powered blender at 8 am.

Our reputation is at stake here. Boston already has early closing times, no happy hour, no open containers. If a cop catches you with fireworks, they're confiscated and turned over to the State Police Bomb Squad. Gambling? We'll see. I mean, I don't need Boston to morph into the Bourbon Street of the Northeast, but letting cars drive 200 mph on city streets seems consistent with our values. If the drivers all give each other the finger twice per lap, it'll just be like a faster version of what we're doing anyway.

My prediction is that the Boston Grand Prix will not only overcome the red tape and naysayers, but that it'll become a popular annual event. The way these things seem to work is that everyone bitches and moans about a proposed event until it actually happens, at which point we find out that we love it. It's a very Grinch/Christmas situation. Look, we shut down Storrow Drive for the Pops and deliberately schedule a Red Sox game during the Marathon. We can handle race cars on Congress Street.

And if you don't like it, get out of town that weekend. Go to the Cape. I'll be wandering the streets of the Seaport. With my blender. ◆

Think that's funny? Send unbiased emails to ezra@improper.com.

2 FAST 2 FURIOUS: If we can handle the Sox and the Marathon on the same day, surely we can host a little street racing.

IMPORTED FROM IRELAND

Dream Catcher®

Legendary Toasted Chestnut Liqueur

The origins of Dream Catcher, an old Gaelic recipe, started in a historic farm house with a pot still in County Cavan, Ireland.

A farmer was inspired to blend an elixir of the natural flavor of toasted chestnuts and other natural flavors with select Irish Spirits to create the superb taste of a toasted Irish Liqueur. This wonderful treasure was discovered several years ago and is now coming to the world.

The farmer claimed it was a "Dream worth catching".

Dream Catcher Hot Chestnut

Pour a shot of Dream Catcher into a brandy glass. Top with an equal part of very hot water. Savor the spectacular, warm taste of toasted chestnuts with select Irish Spirits.

GUIDE TO SUCCESS

THE TV STAR OPENS UP ABOUT HER LATEST ROLE, A GROUNDBREAKING KISS AND HER STINT AS A "CELEBUTANTE."

ACTRESS LISA EDELSTEIN, 49, STARS IN THE BRAVO series Girlfriends' Guide to Divorce. Born in Boston and raised in New Jersey, she moved to New York at the age of 18 to study theater at NYU but quickly became known as the queen of the club scene. She went on to write and star in the seminal AIDS play Positive Me. Her first job in television was on MTV's Awake on the Wild Side, but she is perhaps best known for playing Dr. Lisa Cuddy on the long-running medical series House. She has also appeared on Seinfeld, Ally McBeal, Relativity, The West Wing and The Practice. In film, she's had roles in Keeping the Faith, What Women Want and Daddy Day Care. She lives in Los Angeles.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Is there a show or movie of yours you watch repeatedly?
LISA EDELSTEIN: It's sort of a rule that I never watch myself more than once, twice at most, or else the judgment factory starts producing headlines and bumper stickers and refrigerator magnets about everything I dislike about myself.

How did you research your current role—did you talk to divorce lawyers, divorced friends or what? I've lived in both the 20th and 21st centuries, when more than half of all marriages end in divorce. But ultimately, this show is about relationships and friendships and parenting and dating. Divorce is the springboard. The rest is human behavior.

How did you prepare for your role as a transgender woman on Ally McBeal? I happened to have known a number of trans people in my young adulthood, although the language around it was different then. A lot was different at the time, including the fact that a cisgender gal like myself played a transgender woman at all. So to me, the most important part of playing a trans woman was to do it with the same dignity and grace I'd use to play any woman who was fighting for her right to exist. And although Ally McBeal is a comedy, the role itself was in no way mocking or embarrassing trans people. It mocked people's reactions to trans people.

You've played a lesbian and a transgender woman. Bold career move or calculated risk? Nowadays it seems almost silly to talk about those roles as being edgy, particularly that of Rhonda Roth, an awesome character on Relativity who happened to be gay. At the time, it was a huge deal. We had the first-ever lesbian make-out scene on network TV. I kissed Kristin Dattilo softly on the lips for a brief few seconds, then took a breath and went in for more. The network requested they edit out the going-in-for-more part, because the kissing was tolerable, but liking it was pushing their boundaries. Hilarious now. It's hard to imagine that would be so shocking, but sadly, it was. I was psyched to do both roles. I never worried much about it being bold or risky. Who cares?

Do you like or seek out roles that push the envelope? When they come my way, I'm thrilled. I've lived an interesting life and known all kinds of people, so the more variety I get to play, the happier I am.

Thing you learned from being a club kid and "It" girl? It was a life-changing experience actually, on many levels. Firstly, the world I inhabited at the time was incredibly special, unique, of the moment and gone in a flash. In the days before the Internet, cities had hidden microcosms that you had to dig to discover, hotbeds of creativity, where mainstream people went for inspiration, if they could get in. What a thing to witness as a young adult. But meanwhile, the AIDS crisis was hitting full steam, and although President Reagan had yet to say the word AIDS, friends and acquaintances were dying at an unimaginable rate. And during all this, suddenly Maureen Dowd approaches me to do a day-in-the-life interview for The New York Times Magazine. I knew that it would change my life. I knew it would be complicated. But I couldn't turn it down. When that interview hit the stands, I was catapulted into a kind of celebrity I had never experienced. My phone number and my address were listed, so I immediately inherited 20 stalkers and a lot of unwanted phone calls. I was famous for no particular reason; there was nothing to back it up, so rumors began circulating about me, stupid rumors that had no foundation in truth, and I was so uncomfortable. I realized that fame was not a goal. I quietly removed myself from all the parties and the scene. I took jobs where no one would find me. I had to reassess my life. It was at that point that I dropped out of college and wrote Positive Me, a musical dramedy about sex, drugs, love and AIDS. It was produced at a wonderful downtown theater called La Mama.

"The world I inhabited at the time was incredibly special, unique, of the moment and gone in a flash."

Did you find the term "celebutante" insulting? No. Whatever. It was goofy and funny. We had no money and we weren't debutantes, so we were celebutantes. That's about as serious as being famous for no reason should be.

Was Positive Me a turning point for you? Absolutely. It changed my life. I finally had a voice. I could turn this somewhat vacuous celebrity into an experience that really meant something. People were curious about what I had to offer, and they were incredibly supportive when I put myself out there. No one was talking about AIDS publicly yet. These were the days before Rent and Angels in America. So it definitely struck a chord. And for me, I was finally saying and doing something that mattered. I felt like I'd finally earned a spot in the community.

Favorite role of yours on TV? I don't really have favorites, but there have certainly been roles that had a greater effect on my life than others. Seinfeld, of course, was a biggie. People still yell "Risotto!" at me on the street in New York. Relativity was important because it was a fantastic show with incredible people, and my role had a social value that made it even more special. With West Wing, I loved Aaron's writing, and I felt entrusted to make "Laurie the sex worker" into a whole person and not a sketch of one. With Ally McBeal, it took several years for people on the street to stop asking me if I was "really a man." And House, it goes without question, changed my life. To be on a show that successful is a really incredible experience. I worked with smart, funny, dark people for seven fabulous years. And it led to Girlfriends' Guide to Divorce, which is the best job I've had to date.

Do you view yourself as fearless, a word that's often used to describe you? Oh God, no. I've got tons of limitations and I want them gone. ◆

DANCE ON DISPLAY

If you've spent time in Central Square, you've likely heard the drum beats that rumble down from 536 Mass. Ave., reverberating for a block in either direction. But if you're not among the 1,200 dancers who visit the Dance Complex each week, you may never have stepped foot in the upstairs studios and seen the source of those sounds. "In the 24 years of the Dance Complex, you always heard the drums above you," says executive director Peter DiMuro. "But if you weren't savvy enough to go up the stairs, you never saw the dance."

That's changing with the debut of Studio 7, a street-level rehearsal, performance and event space offering three huge windows with a view of the action. The 1,800-square-foot addition will host cabaret-style performances, accommodating projects that might not suit the Julie Ince Thompson Theatre upstairs, as well as gallery showings and other events that bridge art forms. "We've been kind of siloed in dance, and I think 20 years ago we needed to claim dance as our own space," DiMuro says. "Now it feels like it's 'dance and,' not 'dance or.'"

> "I WANT TO ENCOURAGE EVERYBODY TO FEEL COMFORTABLE COMING TO DANCE"

In 2016, Studio 7 will also generate new programming possibilities for the Dance Complex, which already hosts 90 classes a week in dozens of disciplines, from ballet and bachata to bhangra and breakdancing. "The most obvious thing is that we're now able to offer programs to people with disabilities because we're more accessible than we have been. Although we have a lift up to our second floor, this allows people to wheel right in if that's their mode of transportation," DiMuro says. "We're also looking at intergenerational programming where kids 15 and under can work with people 50 and over."

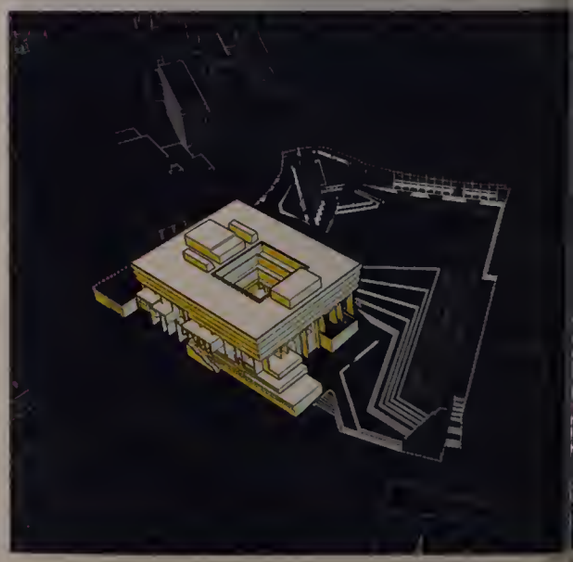
Unveiled in mid-December, the renovations to the 1884 building were made possible by a $500,000 grant from the Barr Foundation—a major windfall for the Dance Complex's slim staff of seven part-timers—along with funds from an Indiegogo campaign that proffered perks like stage makeup tutorials and wedding dance lessons. DiMuro hopes the finished product will provide a portal that welcomes newbies as well as dance devotees. "I want to encourage everybody to feel comfortable coming to dance," he says. "Yes, I can come see a performance, or yes, I can be a professional dancer and go on that track. But I think dance is just a healthy, balancing, evolutionary thing for the everyday person to do. And that's what we want this space to allow." / Jacqueline Houton

CULTIVATING CREATIVITY

As the saying goes, one man's trash is another man's treasure, but rarely has that adage rang as true as in the case of the Somerville ARTfarm for Social Innovation. Envisioned as a self-sustaining creative commons dedicated to fostering collaboration between local artists, entrepreneurs and green-minded organizations, ARTfarm found an unexpected home in a 2.2-acre lot off of McGrath Highway that previously housed a waste-transfer site. Soon, says Somerville Arts Council executive director Gregory Jenkins, the Poplar Street spot that once held tons of trash could be home to shipping containers housing studio, gallery and performance spaces, as well as a black box theater, community gardens, greenhouses and an entryway installation by Somerville cut-paper artist Randal Thurston.

The ARTfarm concept started to take root when Mayor Joseph Curtatone approached the SAC after the site became available in 2013. "He just sort of said, 'Why don't you guys do something with this?'" Jenkins says. 'Take it over, activate it, make something, do something.'" So Jenkins and fellow council members got together for a series of "visioning sessions" with the Brickbottom community, creating a wish list for the location. They've since secured more than $900,000 in grants and other funding from sources including ArtPlace America and MassDevelopment. Moreover, Jenkins says the city is "pretty positively committed" to another $450,000.

The team hopes to break ground this spring and be operational by summer. But in the meantime, they've already been partnering with local arts organizations to host public events on the site, including last year's Big Tiny House festival, Starlab's annual music festival, Project MUM and a number of dance parties.



"So, it's being activated, but the whole plan is to try and figure out how to build physical studio spaces there using shipping containers," Jenkins says. The hope is to allow local artists and creators to lease them as studio, gallery or performance spaces at very affordable prices. "We just need to break even and make sure it's self-sustaining," he adds. "So the goal is that we can lease these studio spaces for dirt cheap, which people are clamoring for."

Artists will be able to apply for ARTfarm space, and Jenkins hopes to curate an eclectic community of tenants whose work will serve the neighborhood. "The other thing that we can do is, if we charge less [for the space], we could ask, 'What are you going to do to activate the courtyard of that space?'" he says. "So we could create interesting curations where, by not charging as much money, we can expect them to have more public programming. The question is, now, how do we develop a site where the public engages, but the arts community has a stake in it and has a home there, so they can do this work? And we're positive that can happen." / Alexandra Cavallo

PLAZA VISION

Kim Conaty
Curator for the Rose Art Museum at Brandeis University

START DATE: December 2015

PREVIOUS GIG: Sue and Eugene Mercy Jr. Assistant Curator of Drawings and Prints at the Museum of Modern Art in New York

PREDECESSOR: Nobody, exactly—this is a new position for the Rose, which has had museum director Christopher Bedford, a curator-at-large and faculty members tackling curatorial duties.

RESOLUTION FOR THE NEW YEAR: "I'll be working on a thorough review of the collection over the next year, with an eye to a large-scale collection presentation in the near future, something that we all want to see happen very soon and ideally in a new, expanded setting," Conaty says. "I want the Rose to be known as the key institution in New England for art since the mid-20th century."

ONE 2016 MUST-SEE: "An important retrospective of the under-recognized New York-based artist and writer Rosalyn Drexler, whose bold and sometimes biting collages and paintings of the 1960s will be a new discovery for many." Conaty calls Rosalyn Drexler: Who Does She Think She Is?, opening on Feb. 12, a "great example of how reinvestigations into canonical movements like Pop continue to reveal fascinating figures whose contributions are due a more careful look."

Peggy Fogelman
Norma Jean Calderwood Director of the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum

START DATE: January 2016

PREVIOUS GIG: Director of Collections at the Morgan Library & Museum in New York

PREDECESSOR: Anne Hawley, who steps down at the end of 2015 after 26 years as director

RESOLUTION FOR THE NEW YEAR: "My first goal is to get settled and focus on meeting people," says Fogelman, who spoke with us in December, shortly before moving to Boston. "I am so excited to work with all of my talented new colleagues at the museum, and our trustees, overseers and members. I am also looking forward to connecting with all the other cultural and public institutions in Boston as I embrace my new city." She's not unfamiliar with the area, however: Fogelman worked at Salem's Peabody Essex Museum as director of education and interpretation from 2007 to 2009.

ONE 2016 MUST-SEE: "A special exhibition called Off the Wall: Gardner and her Masterpieces [opening] in early March. It's a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to see some of the masterpieces from the collection up close and personal and in a new light in the Hostetter Gallery in the new wing. The truly exceptional quality and importance of the Gardner's paintings will really shine through. Very exciting indeed."

START DATE: March 2015

PREVIOUS GIG: Curator in the Department of Photography at the Museum of Modern Art in New York

RESOLUTION FOR THE NEW YEAR: "2016 is an exciting year for the ICA, as we will be celebrating 10 years on the waterfront and 10 years of being a collecting museum," Respini says. "Although we are an old institution, we are still in our infancy in terms of our collecting life. On this occasion, this summer we will present an ambitious exhibition drawn entirely from the collection to celebrate a decade of collecting. My goal is to continue to expand ICA's collection so that we can make important contemporary art works available to our audiences, permanently."

ONE 2016 MUST-SEE: "A large-scale wall tableau of cut-paper silhouettes by the New York-based artist Kara Walker, which speaks to the history of race in America, a topic that is very relevant and urgent today. I am also delighted to introduce the beautiful and contemplative photographic work of Boston-born artist Liz Deschenes in her first-ever museum survey exhibition. Both will open this summer."

It's officially four more years for the popular arts and event space Lawn on D. But could City Hall Plaza be following in its footsteps?

City Hall workers took baby steps toward that goal this past summer when they rolled out turf and added Adirondack chairs and lawn games to the plaza, dubbing it the "Front Lawn"—perhaps a not-so-subtle reference to the South Boston spot.

"It was really surprising that something so simple could actually draw people to City Hall," says Tricia Lyons, city director of public facilities.

"Everyone at City Hall who's involved with activating City Hall Plaza was just watching and learning with what was happening at Lawn on D," adds Julie Burros, the city's chief of arts and culture. "What was amazing was the variety of things that they engaged in on a consistent and ongoing business. There was music, visual art, food and lots of things."

When it opened nearly 50 years ago, City Hall Plaza was intended to be an active civic space, modeled after the plaza in Siena, Italy. That never materialized, but there are renewed hopes given the success of the Front Lawn and three years of hosting the Boston Calling music festival. More answers will come in the fall of 2016, when the Rethink City Hall project ends its yearlong study and begins to implement a plan for the plaza.

"One thing that's really important as we move forward is flexibility," Lyons says of the Rethink City Hall group, which includes city workers as well as landscape architects and engineers. "We want to figure out the best way to allow for large gatherings or bring it down to a manageable level where people will want to come to either see interesting art pieces or just come and have lunch."

Financing and weight restrictions on the space above the T will likely limit any large development on the plaza, but even basic improvements could go a long way toward luring more arts events. "One thing we've found is there's no infrastructure on the plaza to accommodate programming, from something small to something big," says senior project manager Maureen Anderson. "Right now, anybody who wants to come into the plaza has to bring everything with them, including sound, power, audio."

The makeover for City Hall Plaza is expected to be the first part of a larger vision for City Hall that could include more space for cultural programming inside the concrete behemoth as well as on the plaza. The hope is to draw more daily visitors to the area and use the Front Lawn to take advantage of the uptick in pedestrian traffic once the Government Center MBTA stop reopens this spring.

"We're in a very exciting time in that the mayor is very supportive of art throughout the city, and even in a public context," Anderson says. "And we're excited here to begin to understand what the opportunities are with that." / Matt Martinelli

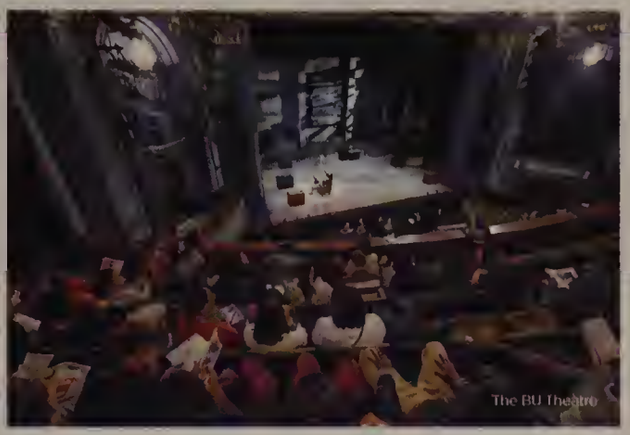
STAGE WHISPERS

This fall, drama in Boston's theater scene grabbed bigger headlines than some of the shows. In a matter of weeks, Emerson closed the struggling Colonial Theatre amid a campus space crunch, the Wang and Shubert Theatres announced that Citigroup's sponsorship would end in 2016, the Boston Lyric Opera said it would leave the Shubert, and BU announced it would sell the BU Theatre, home to the Huntington Theatre Company. "It seemed to be one story, but in fact, they're very, very different stories," says Huntington managing director Michael Maso. "They did happen at the same time, and I think it's confusing, but they're very different issues."



The city is currently undertaking a study on the need for performance and rehearsal space in Boston, expected for completion in the spring. In the meantime, we chatted with some major players about their needs and possible solutions that might be put in motion in 2016. | Matt Martinelli

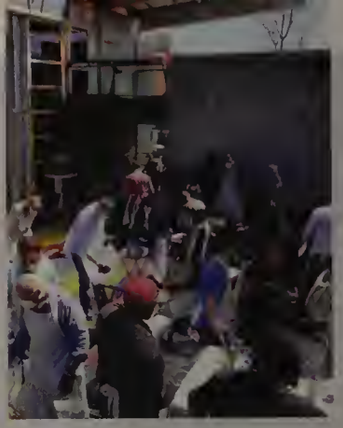
THE WANG, SHUBERT & COLONIAL THEATRES

The loss of a title sponsor was a hit that Joe Spaulding, president and CEO of the Citi Wang and Shubert Theatres, says he saw coming. Citi signed on to a sponsorship 10 years ago as it opened retail banks in the Boston market, but that sponsorship will soon end as Citi closes its retail banks in the area—a move that clearly has nothing to do with Boston's theater scene. Spaulding is confident a new sponsor will be put in place in 2016: "We are in talks with many different organizations, both locally and globally." The greater issue, he says, is adapting programming. The Shubert will fill the BLO void in part with shows from the Fiddlehead Theatre Company. Spaulding and Maso say they're in talks to have the Shubert house some Huntington productions in the short term if needed. The theaters have also been generating revenue by hosting wedding receptions and events such as a Lexus car show. Bullish on the theater scene, Spaulding hopes the Colonial Theatre—which had hosted Citi Performing Arts programming—will retain performance space after Emerson renovates the building. (A task force for the project will make recommendations in March.) "I think once the campus is where they need it," Spaulding says, "we might have an opportunity to operate that theater again as a theater."

THE HUNTINGTON THEATRE COMPANY

Maso is firm on the future of the Huntington in the BU Theatre: "The Huntington is still pursuing ways to stay in the theater in the long run. That's probably in partnership with a development partner once the sale process is completed," he says. "The priority has to be a way to work with us, BU and another partner to make sure that we stay in the space." Maso hopes to renovate the building, creating a larger lobby, a restaurant space and function rooms. He envisions a theater operating with the same model as the Huntington-run Calderwood Pavilion at the BCA, where the Huntington rents out space to smaller arts groups. Any renovation would displace the Huntington for a couple years, a time period when they could perform at the Shubert or find other theater space, hopefully avoiding bumping smaller groups from Calderwood. But what if the building is sold to a developer uninterested in preserving the theater? For now Maso isn't talking about a Plan B, but he's hoping BU will make a decision on the sale this spring, so Plan A—or any Plan B—can soon commence.



BOSTON LYRIC OPERA

BLO general and artistic director Esther Nelson rattles off a number of reasons for leaving the Shubert after 18 years: acoustics, seat comfort, squeezed lobby space, technical challenges backstage, high venue fees for single tickets. She also knows exactly what the BLO wants from a future home: modern amenities, a large lobby that includes cafes to serve patrons, a location with parking and public-transit access, 1,400 to 1,600 seats, an orchestra pit that accommodates 120 musicians and a stage large enough for a 60- to 80-member chorus, 20 soloists and sets. But those ambitions will be tough to realize. Nelson knows she needs to find partners, since the BLO couldn't be the sole tenant of a space that could cost hundreds of millions of dollars, so she's been in contact with the city as well as the ballet, theater companies and musical organizations. "Most of them," she says, "have expressed an interest in a facility that's suitable for local producers," and not geared toward large touring productions. She thinks the flexibility to, say, close off spaces to turn a 1,500-seat opera venue into a 500-seat theater could be key. "It might not be just one building. It might be a combination of refurbishing existing buildings, adjusting them, adapting them. Or it could be a new building or several buildings," Nelson continues. "It's a good time to address the long-term and the immediate needs. ... I see multiple solutions over multiple steps in the coming years."

A CRAFTY MOVE

The Society of Arts and Crafts has big plans for its soon-to-be new home at 100 Pier 4.

When the Boston Redevelopment Authority announced it was looking for nonprofit tenants for a new 20,000-square-foot cultural space on the rapidly evolving Boston waterfront—and subsidizing the rent—the 118-year-old organization jumped at the chance, as did semifinalists the Celebrity Series and the Steinway Society. But the Society of Arts and Crafts, which has called a small, two-floor space on Newbury Street home for about 40 years, ultimately scored the spacious new digs and will be moving in early this summer. Communications manager Tess Mattern says that opportunities for new programming are huge.

"We've been really hoping to expand our retail and exhibition programs, and this is going to give us the perfect opportunity to do that. We will also be getting a multipurpose room so we can increase our educational offerings," Mattern says. "We're very excited to have artists come in to do demonstrations, have lectures.... And it's enough space that we can have an artist-in-residency program and a craft library. There are just so many possibilities for us there, and we are really going to make good use of the space."

That space extends outside, where the society hopes to host public sculpture, benches designed by noted furniture makers, craft fairs and other programming. But Mattern says the excitement isn't just about the new space; it's also about getting to know—and getting known around—their new 'hood. "The neighborhood is really interesting because it's always been a strong neighborhood for the arts. The Fort Point artists have always been there ... and then with the move of the ICA [from downtown], the neighborhood became more of a focal point," she says. "We definitely see ourselves as an organization who wants to partner with our neighbors there and really join forces and highlight the work of the Fort Point artists."

To that end, the society already has its first show for the new space in the works. "It's going to be titled Radius, and it's going to be an exhibit that is specifically of artists within a 2- to 5-mile radius of our new location," Mattern says, "so that we introduce ourselves to the neighborhood and make friends." / Alexandra Cavallo

The Society of Arts and Crafts isn't the only arts group expanding its programming and square footage in South Boston. Youth nonprofit Artists for Humanity is more than halfway through fundraising for a $28 million expansion to its 100 W. Second St. home. "Someone recently said to me, 'So, you're a faith-based organization after all!'" laughs executive/artistic director Susan Rodgerson about the expansion, which will add 52,000 square feet. Slated to break ground this spring, the addition will allow AFH to double the number of teen artist employees to 500, host pop-ups in partnership with local businesses and open a gallery, a store, a cafe and a makerspace for use by the public on a membership basis. "I really think it's going to be a great hub for people who work and live here."

ONE FOR THE BOOKS

Bookworms rejoice! The Boston Public Library's central branch will mark a new chapter this summer when the three-year renovation of its 1970s concrete hunk comes to an end. "The existing Johnson building wasn't being well utilized," admits interim president David Leonard. But with the major overhaul, it'll "really be the true complement to the McKim building that it was always intended to be."

The biggest aim, Leonard says, is to reconnect the library to the neighborhood and the city at large, pointing to the exterior's soaring new windows—19 feet high and 55 feet wide—as the most visible indicator. Inside, lit lovers will find a new 4,500-square-foot retail space that'll be home to WGBH's first satellite studio. "There's a real connection between the dissemination of information through a not-for-profit news organization in the same way that you get that in a library," Leonard says of the Allston-based media outlet, which will host recordings, live shows and other to-be-determined public programming. Rounding out the space is the Newsfeed Cafe, a new spot for coffee, breakfast, lunch and small plates from the Catered Affair, as well as a designated area for displaying new library materials with a browser-friendly "bookstore feel." The setup speaks volumes to the mix of tradition and innovation hoped for at the library, an institution that's been a trailblazer since its 1848 founding as the first large free municipal library.

"The modern library for the 21st century really has to continue to be responsive to the needs of the patrons," Leonard says. "As their needs and demands evolve, we have to continue to evolve too." / Soroh Hogmon

Pat Falco's Untitled (Coming Soon)

City Hall may not be the most aesthetically pleasing edifice in the city, but a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts and partnership with MassArt is ensuring that what goes on inside the building this coming year will be a different story. Ten artists have been selected for the preliminary stages of an inaugural artist-in-residence program, Boston AIR. Three of them will ultimately earn $20,000 each for a six-month residency based on proposals created with liaisons from 12 city departments, presented to the public on Jan. 23 and implemented sometime after the three artists take office in mid-February.

Chief of arts and culture Julie Burros says the effort both supports the city's artists and brings "new ideas and creative thinking and creative problem solving from far outside government into government to look for new solutions." But as Boston Art Commission director and Boston AIR project manager Karin Goodfellow points out, the two groups may have more in common than one might imagine: The first meeting drove home how many municipal employees are also dancers, singers, painters and writers. "Something that was unexpected," Goodfellow says, "was just seeing how humanizing it was to even have a conversation about art with people at the city."

As for the artists, contenders currently preparing proposals include former Boston Center for the Arts resident Liz Nofziger, who brought her Bounce ping-pong tables to the BCA Plaza in 2014, Shaw Pong Liu, who organized a 2014 Water Graffiti for Peace project in Chinatown, and Pat Falco, the artist behind the colorful Untitled (Coming Soon) murals on Georges Island last summer, along with seven other local talents. Three of them—Juan Obando, Melissa Nussbaum Freeman and Roberto Mighty—paused from their preparations to give us a sneak peek at the thought process behind their proposals. / Meghan Kavanaugh

Visual artist Juan Obando has met with liaisons for the police, education and transportation departments, the last of which has inspired a project to help the department reduce the number of fatal car accidents by utilizing social media. "For example," he explains, "collecting photographs from Instagram tagged with #drivingselfie within the geography of Boston and creating a series of video projections in which these images are animated to sync a version of a nostalgic pop song."

Melissa Nussbaum Freeman envisions working on a performance art project in concert with the Commission on Affairs of the Elderly and other departments. As she notes, "The elderly are, at the same time, people with disabilities, veterans, women who use and need transportation, public works, education, food [and] health care." Details are still in flux, but she plans to use her primary medium of playback theatre, a form of improv where audience members have their stories enacted by the performers.

Filmmaker and visual artist Roberto Mighty says he plans to work with the Commission on Affairs of the Elderly and the departments of transportation and public works "to develop artistic, interactive web/mobile environments that will focus on multimedia storytelling, including film, video, digital animation, audio and music," incorporating public touch-screen kiosks. He's no stranger to arts residency programs. Mighty is the first-ever artist in residence at Mount Auburn Cemetery.

QUEEN BEE

Toni Bee is back in office. After serving as Cambridge's Poet Populist from 2011 to 2013 (as the first woman to fill the post), Bee has begun her three-month term as the city's first Poetry Ambassador. The new Cambridge Arts program will see ambassadors change with the seasons in 2016, and each will organize community events and outreach. Bee helped us become well-versed on the subject. / Meghan Kavanaugh

WHAT KIND OF POETRY DO YOU LIKE TO READ AND WRITE? I like all types, but I love free verse. I'm such a poetry nerd. ... As long as you're telling the truth with your emotions, that's what's up.

BESIDES ORGANIZING THE PROGRAM'S INAUGURAL POETRY EVENT IN DECEMBER, WHAT DO YOU HAVE PLANNED? I want to have sessions I'll set up at a cafe, and just open free time for people to talk about poetry. Come, talk, I'll look at your work and we can just connect that way. ... The youth have a lot to say in Cambridge. I'm really interested in what the teens are doing, too.

YOU'RE A FOUNDER OF BLACK LIVES MATTER IN CAMBRIDGE. HOW DO THE ARTS PLAY INTO ACTIVISM? Poetry and the arts connect people through emotion. The current temperature of this country, we're all going through it. Whether it be Muslim, whether it be black-skinned or brown-skinned people...my thing is write it down, get it out and share it. ... I think being Poet Populist of Cambridge was the only way that I was able to march in the streets because Cambridge gave me a voice, or the people of Cambridge gave me a voice. So the Poetry Ambassador program is a way for me to continue to tell people, "Get your emotions out. Share it with others who are feeling something."

DO YOU THINK THE OTHER AMBASSADORS WILL BE ABLE TO SHARE THEIR DIVERSE EXPERIENCES? I do. I'm very glad that there will be other poetry ambassadors because we can get the flavor of the city. We've got tech companies; we've got very poor. Girl, I'm just getting off food stamps myself. You can quote me on that! Seriously, we go from high to low. Maybe a block away from me, there are million-dollar people in million-dollar homes, and I'm the former Poet Populist and I'm low-income. Everybody in that range has something to share. The million-dollar person will shake my hand and say, "I like that poem," and the poor person will shake my hand and say, "I like that poem." Emotions cover it all.

Winter IS COMING

Don't let one deceptively mild December fool you: It's happening. And after last year's Snowmaggedon, we've decided to take a different approach this time around—and really lean into winter instead of just counting the days till spring. Here's your guide to a season's worth of outdoor adventures and cozy comforts.

Moving the Mountain

Snow won't be the only thing sailing through the air in Boston this winter. Head to Fenway Park on Feb. 11 and 12 for Polartec Big Air at Fenway, a snowboarding and freeskiing throwdown held as part of the International Ski Federation's World Cup tour. The competition will be stiff, with Olympian skiers and snowboarders pulling out their gnarliest tricks from atop a 140-foot snow ramp. We checked in with Olympic big air snowboarder Ty Walker, a freshman at Brown who grew up boarding in Vermont, for some pro tips for shredding the competition. Alexandra Cavallo

ON WHETHER BEING AN OLYMPIC ATHLETE MAKES THIS COMPETITION SEEM LIKE NO SWEAT No! Definitely not. At the Olympics, I was really young. Qualifying was tough and stressful because I expected myself to make the team, but once I was in Russia I tried to just enjoy it. I wanted to do my best in the event, but I wasn't the favorite to win, necessarily, so I wasn't in a high-pressure situation. I feel the most pressure and get the most nervous for events that I'm expected to win, regardless of the caliber of talent coming off of my win last year in Big Air. I'm pretty nervous about the Fenway event, but also just excited to be able to compete after injuries and to be able to compete at a venue like that.

ON HER SIGNATURE TRICK I guess my signature trick would be a tuck-knee. I take a backside 720, featuring a backside [illegible] and then I'm tucked in the air. Then, finally, they see [illegible] I'm pretty consistent with them. It's kind of my go-to crowd-pleaser trick.

ON TIPS FOR AN AMATEUR LOOKING TO GET INTO BIG AIR BOARDING Don't [illegible] put [illegible] New [illegible] but don't [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] really [illegible] [illegible]

ON THE EASIEST TRICK FOR BEGINNERS [illegible] And [illegible] they're really hard to do properly—especially when you're just learning. I started with a backside 360, and I would recommend that because they really help you get comfortable going blind. On boxes and rails, you can't go wrong with a simple 50/50 or boardslide to start.

ON THE MOST DIFFICULT TRICK TO MASTER I've done a few backside and cab (switch) 900s, but I haven't really perfected them yet. Hopefully this season I'll be able to perfect those and some of the other tricks I've done in the past but haven't gotten super consistent with.

ON HER FAVORITE MOUNTAINS IN NEW ENGLAND I've been to most of the Vermont mountains, and they're all fun, but Stowe definitely holds a really special place in my heart. I know the mountain the best, and I think it's where my real roots are with snowboarding. When I'm home, it's the only time that I ever really get to go riding with my family and hometown friends. Also, I'm biased, but I think they have some of the best parks and the best out-of-bounds terrain you can find in Vermont.

ON THE MASSACHUSETTS SLOPES It's funny that you ask! I had plans to ski at Wachusett this past weekend, but unfortunately I ended up having to stay back and study for my finals. Wachusett is only about an hour away from Brown though, so I know I'll end up making a few trips to there later this winter. I've heard that it's a pretty fun terrain.

A BRIGHT IDEA:

HOW A LOCAL COMPANY IS HELPING PEOPLE FIGHT THE URGE TO HIBERNATE.

"Some people are not at all affected by the winter, and for some people it's like they got hit over the head with a hammer," says Ed Likovich, CEO of GoodLux Technology, the local company behind a product designed to help ward off the winter blues. "You can think of this as kind of a Fitbit for light," he says of SunSprite, a clip-on device that tracks wearers' light exposure and syncs up with an iOS and Android app.

Launched in 2014, SunSprite is the brainchild of Harvard Medical School psychiatrists Jacqueline Olds and Richard Schwartz. "There were a lot of people who came to their private practice with depression who really didn't want to go on drugs right away," Likovich notes. They had success with bright light therapy, but found that many people weren't sure if they were getting the right amount of light at the right time of day. Enter SunSprite, which shows how close you are to your daily light goal, and whether current light conditions are bright enough for therapeutic purposes, with a push of a button, offering more detailed data and personalized coaching through the app.

While a reminder to take a walk around the block or turn on a light box may be especially helpful in the depths of January, SunSprite isn't only aimed at seasonal sufferers. Light exposure affects circadian rhythms, influencing sleep and even athletic performance. "We actually have a few Olympic athletes using our product right now to make sure they're getting enough light at the right time of day," Likovich says. And research published in November in JAMA Psychiatry found that bright light treatment outperformed Prozac in a study of 122 patients with nonseasonal depression. The SunSprite team recently completed their own series of validation pilots with 31 patients in seven clinics and private practices. "We found that after just two weeks of using SunSprite, 88 percent of those improved, and these are people with diagnosed clinical depression," Likovich says. "If you're getting light, you're exercising, you're making social contact, you're seeing a lot of different people. We're hoping this becomes greater than just the sum of its parts." / Jacqueline Houton

SNOW TAPS

Sometimes, you just want a cold one...even if it's cold out. Luckily, New England breweries are happy to oblige. / Alexandra Cavallo

HARPOON BREWERY: 100 BARREL SERIES THUNDER FOAM This robust porter, brewed with ancho and poblano chilies, was the winner at the Kettle Cup employee brewing competition. "We felt it was important for the beer to have the smell and taste of a pepper, without the intense heat," says brewer Ken Hermann.

ABV 4% 5% 6% ✲ 7%

JACK'S ABBY: LASHES This full-bodied red IPL hit shelves in November. "The beer is named after our head brewer Mike Gleason, whom we affectionately call 'Lashes' because of his long, lovely eyelashes," says Jack's Abby office administrator Sarah McGinley.

ABV 4% 5% 6% ✲ 7%

MYSTIC BREWERY: THE HUM This low-frequency porter is a bigger American take on English recipes, with toasty malts and a creamy body. "The namesake is a paranormal phenomenon, a low-frequency hum that 2 percent of the world's population can apparently hear," says designer Lucie Bercelli.

ABV 4% 5% 6% ✲

NARRAGANSETT: AUTOCRAT COFFEE MILK STOUT This limited-edition brew is only out in winter. "Autocrat Coffee is just one of those local icons," says president Mark Hellendrung. "I've had a soft spot for it since my Little League days because my coach worked at Autocrat."

ABV 4% 5% ✲ 6% 7%

NIGHT SHIFT BREWING: CAPE CODDER WEISSE SOUR This pink-tinged December release is dry, tart and tangy, aged with hundreds of pounds of cranberries and "many hours of [redacted]," says cofounder Michael Oxton.

HEAD-TO-TOE SPA TREATMENTS THAT BRING THE HEAT. / SARAH HAGMAN

Agave nectar hot oil scalp treatment. This Bella Santé massage enhancement pulls double-duty; once the essential oil–infused agave is painted on the scalp, the therapist kneads away stress and hydrates hair with a towel head wrap. $15, bellasante.com

Herbal head and neck recovery. Spa Day's traditional 30-minute Thai therapy uses a warm herbal compress to relieve hunched shoulders and stiff neck muscles. $45, spaday.us

Peaceful solitude. After a treatment at new organic spa Balans, take a 10-minute meditation break on a heated table while lying wrapped in sheets and blankets and listening to calming music. $30, balansorganicspa.com

Eco-fin. An alternative to paraffin, this MZ Skin Care hand treatment ditches petroleum for organic ingredients such as shea butter, vitamin E, palm kernel, jojoba, coconut and olive oils. Hands are cleaned with heated towels and then placed inside warm mittens lined with the aforementioned ingredients, which stay on for an hour to soothe dry skin and rough cuticles. $20, mzskincare.com

Beautifying body wrap/treatment. This 90-minute Pyara Aveda service begins with dry exfoliation before application of a self-warming algae mask, which can help alleviate conditions like psoriasis and eczema. Next comes a full-body rubdown—incorporating safflower and soybean oils with lavender, rosemary and bergamot aromas—rounded out by reflexology and a Vichy shower. $180, pyaraaveda.com

The Moroccan ritual. At the Rowes Wharf Health Club & Spa, this hammam-inspired treatment leaves no stone unturned, from a dry brush exfoliation of body, hands and feet to a hot-stone massage and an Ayurvedic Shirodhara treatment, which features a scalp massage with argan and ginger oils. $195, bhh.com

Hot foot pedicure. Bliss turns up its signature lemon and sage soak with hot stones to soothe aching arches and orange oil to soften skin, then uses a warming sea-salt scrub with eucalyptus and rosemary to get blood flowing and treat dry heels. $70, blissworld.com

SWEATER WEATHERED

Staying warm while looking stylish is a struggle Bostonians know far too well. But since 2012, local line The Third Piece has managed just that, mixing fashion and function with its impossibly cute hand-knit accessories. Founded by Carina Donoso and Kristen Lambert, the brand has been picked up by the likes of Bergdorf and Crush Boutique, now, it's helping crafters make their own cozy but cool creations. "There is so much knitwear out there," Donoso says, adding, "It's hard to find inspiration" at a big-box craft store. Enter the Third Piece's newly launched patterns. Five of the brand's signature styles—including the SoHo hat and head band—are currently available, and exclusive original designs are slated to launch in January, along with projects for kids' and pets' wear and home goods. Video tutorials are in the works as well. Want to show off your handiwork? Hit the Third Piece pop-up, which will bring knitters to the Street in Chestnut Hill for social, charitable and other nightly events on Jan. 6–12. / Sarah Hogman

Pop Quiz

Time-traveling trivia in Cambridge.

EVER GET REALLY, really high and watch Jeopardy? Yeah, um, us neither. But Old School Game Show is sort of what we imagine that must be like. Part pub trivia, part '70s-style game show and part live theater experience, the show incorporates sketch comedy, video shorts, dance routines and live music into a zany, immersive experience that invites audience participation. Mustachioed host Mike D'Angelo and the rest of the cast are channeling a Honky Tonkin, Boot Scootin Hootenanny for their latest edition, which means both the trivia and the comedy will be country hoedown-themed. Drawing on inspirations as varied as vaudeville and Pee-wee's Playhouse, the show is better experienced than described, so make a beeline to Oberon on Jan. 10 to get quizzed in the face. | Alexandra Cavallo

Old School Game Show starts at 7:30 pm on Jan. 10 at Oberon, 2 Arrow St., Cambridge. $10–$25. oldschoolgameshow.com

CELL OUT

Those who worship at the altar of Babs (that would be OG diva Barbra Streisand) would jump at the chance to work with the influential actress/singer...even if that job is completely underground. Such is the case in Lyric Stage Company's Buyer and Cellar, a one-man play starring Lyric vet Phil Tayler as an out-of-work actor who scores a gig as Streisand's assistant, guarding and sorting treasures in her basement, the "Great Mall of Malibu." The comedy features a big cast of characters, including Oprah and Bea Arthur (all played by Tayler), and runs through Jan. 3. Alexandra Cavallo

BIRD WATCHING

Out of Alfred Hitchcock's nearly 60 movies, The Birds stands out to many as one of his most unsettling—not to mention the most hazardous to film. Life imitated art when star Tippi Hedren had her face clawed by a gull tied to her costume—the result of Hitchcock's desire to push the movie even further than his previous success Psycho. Using a mix of puppets, animation and real birds trained to attack (plus unnerving cawing in place of a traditional score), the classic horror movie about birds gone wild still terrifies ornithophobes today. Get a beak peek when it screens at the Museum of Fine Arts on Dec. 27 as part of the Art of Alfred Hitchcock series. / Ariana Colozzo

Anomalisa ★★★★ Michael Stone (David Thewlis), middle-aged family man and the respected author of How May I Help You Help Them?, has just flown into Cincinnati and checked into the fictional Fregoli Hotel to speak at a customer service convention. In another film, the hotel's name would be a throwaway detail, but this isn't just another film; it's a masterpiece in miniature, spawned from the brilliant mind of Charlie Kaufman (Synecdoche, New York), who's adapted his script from a play he wrote under the pseudonym Francis Fregoli. Keep in mind that the Fregoli delusion is a rare disorder in which a person suffers the paranoid belief that different people are in fact a single person. Indeed, everyone that Michael encounters—male and female—has the same basic face and voice (Tom Noonan's). That is, until he meets the anomaly that is Lisa (Jennifer Jason Leigh). I should mention that the film—codirected by Kaufman and Duke Johnson—is animated, utilizing old-fashioned stop-motion techniques. If the mundanity of the first third of the film makes you wonder why live actors weren't employed, you'll marvel at the sublime shift into the surreal during later scenes, where puppets that have been manipulated by hand, one frame at a time, have much to say about what it is to be human. (At Kendall Square.)

The Big Short ★★★ During the end credits of Adam McKay's 2010 Will Ferrell/Mark Wahlberg comedy, The Other Guys, the writer/director presented a PowerPoint-style series of infographics breaking down how a Ponzi scheme works, while displaying statistics on corporate greed and how you and I get screwed by the 1 percent. McKay must have felt he was on to something, because his latest pitch-black comedy shows how we were played for fools when the housing bubble burst in 2008. Adapted from Michael Lewis' bestselling The Big Short: Inside the Doomsday Machine by McKay and co-writer Charles Randolph, the movie focuses on a handful of Wall Street misfits (played by Christian Bale, Steve Carell, Ryan Gosling and producer Brad Pitt) who took on the big banks, betting big on the financial collapse and making millions off others' misery. The movie is a long way from McKay's improv-heavy efforts starring Ferrell, whose fans will likely glaze over when faced with this film's massive information dumps relating the inner workings of the finance industry. To make talk of collateralized debt obligation go down a little easier, McKay employs people like Selena Gomez and Margot Robbie to sex up the delivery. For the most part it works. But it's still depressing as hell. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Brooklyn ★★★1/2 This disarming romantic drama from director John Crowley (Boy A) benefits just as much from a starmaking performance by Saoirse Ronan (The Lovely Bones) as it does from a script by novelist Nick Hornby, who's built a solid second career adapting other people's works of fiction into films. In this case, Hornby has condensed Colm Tóibín's Brooklyn, a best-seller about a young Irish immigrant who leaves her small town when an Irish priest in Brooklyn offers to sponsor a move to America, which promises a better future in the hard years after World War II. Eilis Lacey (Ronan) doesn't want to leave her mother and sister behind, but job prospects are slim, so she boards a boat and settles into a job at a Brooklyn department store. Her profound homesickness is eased when she meets Tony (The Place Beyond the Pines' Emory Cohen), an Italian-American plumber who falls hard for her, even if she's not a Dodgers fan. But Eilis' new life is threatened when her sponsoring priest (Jim Broadbent) arrives with devastating news from home. Hornby compresses a bit too much into the third act, but Ronan eases any missteps with her luminous presence. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Concussion ★★ Former investigative journalist Peter Landesman doesn't pull any punches in his scathing critique of the NFL, but that doesn't make him a particularly good filmmaker. Following up his feature debut, Parkland—a docudrama focusing on Dallas, Texas, on the fateful day of Nov. 22, 1963—the writer/director looks at professional football's concussion epidemic, but rather than turn the true story of forensic pathologist Dr. Bennet Omalu (Will Smith) into a compelling drama along the lines of Michael Mann's superb portrait of Big Tobacco whistleblower Jeffrey Wigand in 1999's The Insider, Landesman fumbles by trying to keep too many balls in the air. Not content to simply present Omalu's struggles as he discovers CTE (chronic traumatic encephalopathy) and attempts to make his findings public, Landesman pushes the familiar buttons of a corporate misconduct thriller, while also folding in the tropes of an immigrant love story. That's a lot of players on one field, but it's when the film tries to tackle the effects of CTE on NFL greats that the movie's tone dips into unintentional comedy. Nevertheless, Smith delivers a strong, understated performance as the Nigerian doc, even as the film concusses around him. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Creed ★★★★ Ryan Coogler's cinematic underdog is both a series rebirth and the seventh installment in the Rocky franchise that began with John G. Avildsen's Best Picture winner in 1976. If Creed hits audiences as hard as actor Michael B. Jordan's punches connect with his opponents onscreen, then this crowd-pleaser could collect its own Oscar gold come February. The 29-year-old Coogler follows through on the promise of his writing/directing debut, 2013's Fruitvale Station, which also starred Jordan. And even Raging Bull director Martin Scorsese might appreciate Coogler's staging of the first major fight sequence, which is captured in one seemingly unbroken shot as cinematographer Maryse Alberti expertly moves her steadicam through action that's been so well-choreographed and executed by Coogler that I quite literally had to catch my breath at scene's end. This kid's got talent. So does Adonis Johnson, illegitimate son of Apollo Creed, who leaves LA for Philadelphia, where he seeks out Rocky Balboa (Sylvester Stallone)—his father's best-known opponent, and later best friend—asking the former champ to train him. No one here handles the punches better than Stallone, whose superb performance encompasses the pain of families lost and the transcendence of discovering kin you never knew were there. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

an Oscar five years ago. Hooper's greatest gift as a filmmaker is his tremendous knack for picking projects that attract the attention of Oscar voters, despite the fact that he remains completely out of his depth as a director. His latest film adapts a novel by David Ebershoff that hugely fictionalized the lives of Danish artists Gerda Wegener (Alicia Vikander) and her husband Einar Wegener (Oscar winner Eddie Redmayne)—who would become a transgender pioneer. Adopting the name Lili Elbe in 1920s Copenhagen, Einar would undergo an incredibly risky procedure: the world's first-ever gender reassignment surgery. Lighting-wise, cinematographer Danny Cohen crafts a handsome picture, but Hooper still has no idea where to place his camera or why, so even when he gets strong performances out of his leads (as he does here), he does them no favors with his continued lack of a basic grasp of storytelling. Some of the gaps are filled in by a dreamily evocative score by Alexandre Desplat, but Hooper is destined to always remain Hooper, even with that Oscar. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

The Good Dinosaur ★★1/2 Leave it to the good folks at Pixar Animation Studios to create a dialogue-free short film just in time for the holidays that bucks the current wave of xenophobia by celebrating the non-Christian faith of a brown-skinned father and son. Director Sanjay Patel's Sanjay's Super Team is a semi-autobiographical tale of an Indian boy who daydreams that his family's Hindu gods are superheroes. Alas, after this brief bit of whimsy ends, the animated feature begins, and it's sadly not up to the Pixar pedigree. Many hands worked on this oft-delayed movie as production stretched across six years. When he couldn't crack the third act, original director Bob Peterson was removed in 2013; Peter Sohn was named the new director a year ago. Nevertheless, the pieces still didn't come together. Considering how convoluted the film's backstory is, The Good Dinosaur's plot is distressingly simple, especially after the sophistication of Pixar's most recent triumph, Inside Out. Essentially a Western, with Winsor McCay-style dinosaurs filling the roles of ranchers, the real star of this film is nature—and Pixar knows it, offering gloriously tranquil glimpses of the foliage, mountain ranges and rivers under the end credits. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Hateful Eight ★★★1/2 There are two formats for Quentin Tarantino's latest, but the one to see opens on Christmas at Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Somerville. Each is projecting the "Roadshow" version of the writer/director's second Western in Ultra Panavision 70. Not since 1966's Khartoum has a movie been shot and exhibited in this widest-of-widescreen 70mm film format, and it's a sight to behold. Sure, you can wait until Dec. 31 for the 6-minute-shorter digital version, but you'll miss the true beauty of Oscar-winning cinematographer Robert Richardson's compositions. You'll also lose the built-in bathroom break provided by the intermission, along with Ennio Morricone's musical overture that opens the film. The legendary Italian composer contributes his first Western score in four decades, but it's closer to his horror/thriller work in the "giallo" genre—fitting, since the movie's essentially a mashup of Tarantino's Reservoir Dogs and John Carpenter's The Thing. Kurt Russell starred in the latter classic, and he's part of this film's terrific ensemble, joined by Tarantino repertory players like Samuel L. Jackson, Tim Roth and Michael Madsen. Russell plays a bounty hunter forced to take refuge from a blizzard with his prisoner (Jennifer Jason Leigh), and the storm is just the start of their troubles. While not Tarantino's best, it's bloody fun nonetheless. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Hunger Games: Mockingjay – Part 2 ★★1/2 The Hunger Games conclude with a whimper as Jennifer Lawrence's Katniss Everdeen, the reluctant leader of the rebellion against the Capitol and its dastardly leader President Snow (Donald Sutherland), regains her voice after being brutally choked by Peeta Mellark (Josh Hutcherson) at the end of Mockingjay – Part 1. She still loves him though, and she kinda loves Gale Hawthorne too, I guess, but there's so little heat in this triangle that it feels tragically square. Made by music-video veteran Francis Lawrence, who's directed all but the first film in this series based on Suzanne Collins' trilogy of young adult novels, this final installment brings back Effie Trinket (Elizabeth Banks), Caesar Flickerman (Stanley Tucci), Haymitch Abernathy (Woody Harrelson) and Plutarch Heavensbee (the late Philip Seymour Hoffman, in his final, incomplete performance). I admit to being amazed that most of these talents signed on for this nonsense. (Gotta pay the bills somehow!) Still, these films are marginally better than their Twilight counterparts. In short, Hunger Games fans will likely be satisfied with this final meal, while the rest of us will feel pretty famished. Pass the popcorn! (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

In the Heart of the Sea ★ Ron Howard's terrible film opens in 1850 with author Herman Melville (Ben Whishaw) arriving in Nantucket, determined to talk to salty old Thomas Nickerson (Brendan Gleeson), the last survivor of the Essex, a whaling ship that met disaster during its 1820 maiden voyage. Cue the film's flashback structure, which finds Nickerson recounting not his story, but the story of Owen Chase (Chris Hemsworth), the Essex's first mate, because why not? Chase finds himself babysitting inexperienced landlubber George Pollard (Benjamin Walker), who's been installed as the vessel's captain—a position that had been promised to Chase. A battle of egos ensues, but this film is no Mutiny on the Bounty. In fact, it doesn't know what it wants to be. Sure, it's being marketed as "the true encounter that inspired the myth of Moby Dick," but by the time the massive white whale appears, Howard has no idea what to do with it. Neither does his army of visual effects artists, who've assembled a picture that looks less realistic than John Huston's 1956 adaptation of Moby Dick. Like Huston, Howard shot in Spain's Canary Islands. Alas, he might as well have shot in his bathtub. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Joy ★★ "Inspired by the stories of daring women" declares the onscreen text that opens David O. Russell's meandering mess, before concluding, "one in particular." She's Joy Mangano, inventor of the Miracle Mop, and she's played by Russell's go-to actress, Jennifer Lawrence, in this heavily fictionalized portrait that intertwines fairy tale and soap opera. The former is represented by Joy's rags-to-riches story, while the latter is reserved for the daytime television that Joy's shut-in mother (Virginia Madsen) views nonstop from bed. This kind of quirkiness abounds; take Joy's grandmother Mimi (Diane Ladd), who won't let a little thing like her midmovie death stop her from narrating Joy's story. This is no Sunset Boulevard, though, and Joy's no Norma Desmond, much as Russell tries to turn her into an icon. Lawrence gives it her all as a single mom who defies the odds and her working-class upbringing, but there's precious little joy to be found in this unfocused fable. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Spectre ★ The problem with Daniel Craig's James Bond is that his first outing as the British superspy, 2006's Casino Royale, was just too damn good. It reinvented the secret agent with the license to kill as an aggressive bulldog, downplaying the more suave aspects of the character while adding parkour, brutal hand-to-hand combat and an energy that was clearly a direct response to the Jason Bourne series. This was a new Bond, a guy you'd want to have a beer with, never mind a martini. Sadly, in the three films since, Bond's producers have bent over backward trying to return him to the man he was, straining to connect all of Craig's adventures into one big, ridiculously convoluted narrative, serializing his stories like an ongoing cable TV drama while making Bond progressively dour. Craig clearly isn't having much fun in this latest outing, and I don't blame him, since returning director Sam Mendes, hot off of 2012's Skyfall—the most successful Bond film ever, financially if not creatively—is determined to also make the longest Bond picture. On this count, he's succeeded. It's no wonder Craig looks bored; I was checking my watch too, since the 148-minute running time feels infinitely longer. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Spotlight ★★★★ Tom McCarthy's taut, superb drama illuminates the people who make the fading institution of print journalism great. In 2003, The Boston Globe's Spotlight Team won a Pulitzer Prize for its comprehensive coverage of the Roman Catholic Church's sexual-abuse scandal, a painful situation all too familiar to Bostonians who followed the four-person unit's exhaustive yearlong reporting. McCarthy focuses on the compelling story behind the stories, shining a spotlight on the work done by Globe editor Walter "Robby" Robinson (Michael Keaton) and his team—Mike Rezendes (Mark Ruffalo), Sacha Pfeiffer (Rachel McAdams) and Matt Carroll (Brian d'Arcy James)—making what might just be the best film about investigative journalism since Alan J. Pakula's 1976 Oscar winner All the President's Men. Self-described outsider Marty Baron (Liev Schreiber), The Globe's quiet new editor, makes the Spotlight Team's story a priority on his first day on the job, prompting a common refrain he's met with throughout the film: "You want to sue the Church?!" After all, the paper has a lot to lose, since 53 percent of their readership is Catholic. In the end, not even The Globe itself is free from criticism, demonstrating a key quality that McCarthy shares with his subject: integrity. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Trumbo ★★★ Director Jay Roach may be best known for the broad comedy of his Austin Powers and Meet the Parents/Fockers feature films, but his latest is closer in tone and spirit to his HBO historical drama, Recount, which chronicled the turmoil in Florida immediately after the 2000 presidential election. No less political, Trumbo is another true-life tale, this one beginning in 1947, a biographical portrait of the top screenwriter of the time. As detailed in John McNamara's script (based on the book by Bruce Cook), Dalton Trumbo (a fine Bryan Cranston) enjoyed writing in his bathtub, while soaking in both water and an ever-present glass of Scotch. Alas, Trumbo and colleagues like Arlen Hird (Louis C.K.) became targets of a witch hunt led by a House subcommittee and fueled by gossip columnists like Hedda Hopper (Helen Mirren), who branded him a "swimming pool Soviet" for belonging to the Communist Party. Jailed for his political beliefs, Trumbo would nevertheless go on to win two Academy Awards—without receiving credit, since he'd been blacklisted, unable to use his own name. But he never stopped fighting, standing up to "patriots" like John Wayne (David James Elliott) as he battled the absurdity of this injustice. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Edited by Sarah Hagman

NEW CLASSIC If San Francisco native Andrew St. James' mature sound belies his age, perhaps it's because the 20-year-old singer/songwriter is taking cues from Bob Dylan, who inspires much of his poetic style. However, St. James' music, marked by jangly guitars and complex lyrics, is undeniably his own, as is his recording style. To get in touch with his bare emotions, he recorded part of his 2013 debut, Doldrums, demo-style in dank bathrooms—including "this real raunchy one in a basement of a building in Boston," as he told Performer Magazine. He's back in town behind his sophomore release, The Shakes, Jan. 19 at the Red Room at Cafe 939. Viana Colozzo

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

FASHION STATEMENTS After years out of the style spotlight, fashion illustrators are having a moment, grabbing large Instagram followings and choice seats at runway shows. So it's a fine time to revisit a giant of the genre: Kenneth Paul Block, whose watercolor and colored-pencil creations captured boldfaced names like Jacqueline Kennedy and filled the pages of W Magazine and Women's Wear Daily (which published this peek at new fall coats from French fashion houses). Catch 30 of his works, dating from the 1950s to the 1990s, at the Museum of Fine Arts, where the newly opened exhibit Kenneth Paul Block: Illustrations is on view through Aug. 14. Jacqueline Houton

LIT UP

Family secrets come to light in Tanwi Nandini Islam's debut novel, Bright Lines, which follows Ella, a Bangladeshi orphan who's grown up in Brooklyn with her aunt and uncle and their rebellious daughter Charu—for whom she's developed confusing feelings. Uncle Anwar is hiding something too, and matters only become more complicated when Ella comes home from college to find Charu's friend Maya—the runaway daughter of a Muslim cleric—sleeping in her bedroom. Find out how the family's summer unfolds on Jan. 14 when Islam brings her continent-spanning tale to Porter Square Books. / Erin E. Rand

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

CENTRAL WHARF CO. the Financial District's newest eatery!

Restaurants

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Fancuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

CENTRAL WHARF CO. [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, centralwharf@irishconnection.com] The most recent addition to the Glynn Hospitality Group portfolio, Central Wharf Co. located on Milk Strect is the newest hot spot in the financial district. Whether you are coming for dinner or mecting friends for some of our hand crafted cocktails, Central Wharf's welcoming atmosphere is reaffirmed by its gastronomic offerings. With a focus on healthy preparations and locally sourced ingredients, their simple comfort foods concepts are enhanced buy their contemporary accompaniment.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good -vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 Tremont Street, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

NOSTROVIA!

Everyone looked like a million bucks while they raised a million bucks for the Joslin Diabetes Center at its annual High Hopes Gala.

Held at the Westin Copley Place, the black-tie hootenanny attracted the likes of Today show hottie Dylan Dreyer and her dapper husband, Brian Fichera, new president Dr. Peter Amenta and his wife, Christen, 13-year-old honoree Lilly Branka, eminent diabetes researcher Doug Melton, Dover party pair Katie and Trent Welch, brunette beauty Marisa Fusco, the dashing Aaron Townsend, Reese Witherspoon lookalike Anne Cropp, tall drink of water Kenny Barnett and about 400 others, who sipped, supped and boogied to the Sultans of Swing.

The raffle prizes included two tickets to Elton John's 2016 Oscar party in LA, and the following was overheard by the bar: "I hate when parents tell you how many months their baby is. I shouldn't have to do math to figure out how old your kid is."

However, the funniest remark came from the man who saw a woman in a somewhat ostentatious fur coat, despite the unseasonably warm weather, and said, "Is she rushin' the season...or just plain Russian?"

GO FLY A KITE

Any reason to shop at Bloomingdale's before it's actually open is A-OK with us, but Fashion + Philanthropy was an especially good excuse.

A fundraiser for Flying Kites, which helps children in Kenya, the morning featured mimosas and bloodies, brunch bites, a fashion show and the opportunity to scour the racks before the hordes arrived, not to mention a killer gift bag.

Looking smashing for 9:30 am on a Sunday were such beauties as news anchor extraordinaire Lisa Hughes and her adorable boy, Dylan Casey, his big sister, Riley, and father, Mike, the swoon-worthy quartet of Eric and George Papachristos, Jonathan Winegar-Mendez and Sean Griffing, Wellesley yummy mummy Meredith Beaton-Starr and her gorgeous daughter, Hannah, brunette babe Christina Kotseas, the unstoppable Julie Joyal, Bloomies GM Matt Dunphy, delightful do-gooder Saskia Epstein, the utterly lovable Patty Ribakoff and emcee Jenny Johnson, who deserves extra props for looking flawless after her fruit smoothie exploded in her face on the drive there.

"This is the earliest I've ever seen you," one guest said to chef Jody Adams, who responded, "This is probably the earliest I've ever been out in public."

The morning's best remark: "OK, folks, it's time to stop being afraid of pantsuits and turtlenecks."

WHAT'S 2Q PLUS 2Q?

We can't think of anything better than going to a tailgate party without having to watch football, especially when the food is prepared by the best restaurants in the city.

Lovin' Spoonfuls' annual fundraiser, The Ultimate Tailgate Party, was held at the Black Falcon Terminal and drew such sparkly types as Travel Channel star Andrew Zimmern, co-chairs Andy and Mariann Youniss, brunette babe Jennifer Yukimura, the always costumed Lynne Smith and the lovable Gary, city councilor Josh Zakim and his gorgeous fiancee, Grace Rosenthal, cheese deity Brad Wasik, oyster shuckers Isabelle Lew and Jeremy Larsen Scheffer, hash slingers Chris Myers and Joanne Chang, the super-suave Camilo Gutierrez and just about every member of the Boston restaurant community.

Guests chowed on delicious bites, drank, kibitzed and bid in live and silent auctions, and the following exchange took place: "I love that. Where'd you get it?"

"What? My outfit?"

"No. Your drink."

However, the evening's most amusing remark was "Be careful, kids. Spooning leads to forking."

CHEW ON THIS...

"It's like Thanksgiving without the family dysfunction" is how one guest described Food for Thought, the Grow Clinic at Boston Medical Center's annual dinner, held at the Mandarin Oriental.

A fundraiser to help feed hungry kids in the city's poorest neighborhoods, the event featured centerpieces made of produce that would go to the food pantry once everybody went home. Present and accounted for: the flawless Randi Cutler and her adoring other half, Joel, his indomitable father, Teddy, most of the Belkin clan, led by the debonair Steve and his gorgeous wife, Joan, redheaded party animal Nate Drouin and blond beauty Nathalie Hampton, the naturally carbonated Gracie Keezer, Weston socialites Robin and Marcia Brown, eminent MD Mark Slovenkai and the dazzling Rachael Goldfarb, emcee Heather Unruh, Chilmark denizen Sam Feldman, discount retail tycoon Marc Perlman, and so on and so forth.

Winner of the irony award: the guest who said, "Here we are at a fundraiser for starving kids, and I just had to unbutton the top button of my pants." ◆
